

The Almighty Lord Caspian Chapter 631

Chapter 631 Expanding National Territory

Upon hearing Balthazar's words, everyone was in shock. They did not expect Balthazar to have such ambitions: he wanted to expand the territory of Diatoran!

"Your Majesty, Diatoran is very far away from Vadesia and Astronia. We might be thrown into dire straits if we attack these four countries at the same time!"

"He's right! Only Estrya is nearer to us. Filren is far away from us, too. We'll be met with multiple difficulties if we fight countries a long distance away from us.

"Everyone has witnessed the damage brought by the battle held in Southlake City. Now that the situation has finally calmed down, I think we shouldn't start another war. Otherwise, it'll bring about a lot of deaths and casualties."

Several generals expressed their opinions quickly. Everyone found them to be sound. Diatoran still had not recovered from the previous battles, and deploying troops to fight in another war now would be too high a risk.

"The three of them gave sound perspectives. How about the others?" Balthazar asked.

Senior General John Anderson suddenly piped up, "It's my personal opinion that these four countries harbor nefarious motives toward us. Even if we don't attack them, they'll do so after they regroup and recover.

"I think that this is an opportunity that's really hard to come by for us. We should make use of the advantageous situation we're in now after our recent wins and strike and wipe these countries out!"

“We’re in high spirits now, that’s true, General Anderson. Attacking four countries at the same time is still somewhat difficult, though. If they band together against us again, Diatoran might collapse!” a high-ranking official said.

Upon hearing his words, everyone thought about it seriously. Attacking four countries was a bold proposal. A slight misstep and Diatoran would be plunged into a situation beyond saving.

“Your Majesty, Diatoran has just achieved an impressive victory, and we’ve managed to kill Robert Valez and Viktor Obrien. Both Astronia and Vadesia don’t bold a candle to us.

Estrya and Filren are also nothing to worry about. I think that we can embark on a military campaign against these countries and start a war!” Benjamin, the Champion of North Aridlands, said.

+15 BONOS

“Champion Hart makes a good point.” Balthazar nodded.

“Although the Champions in both Astronia and Vadesia were killed, Your Majesty, these countries retain their resources and power. Their armies are the strongest in the world, too.

“If we start a war rashly without learning about their terrain, the possibility of us defeating them is low. If the battle ends up being dragged out, there is a high possibility of us losing!”

“Exactly! Diatoran has suffered from a great amount of losses. We should regroup and recover internally before doing anything else.”

Two other higher-ups quickly added their opinions.

Balthazar noted that everyone had different opinions on the matter. He was also hesitating on that now, and he could only look at Caspian, asking him, “What do you think about this, Caspian?”

Caspian was silent. He was thinking if this could or could not be done.

“Your Majesty, I think we’ll have to postpone this matter. Attacking four countries at the same time is very risky for us!” Caspian said.

Everyone looked at each other in confusion. They all knew of Caspian’s confrontational tendencies—he was unexpectedly calm this time, however.

This was shocking, especially because Caspian had been punished by Balthazar because of the magnitude of his heroic deeds and for his exceedingly confrontational disposition.

“Oh? I didn’t expect you to oppose this, Caspian. Are you afraid?” Balthazar asked in bafflement.

“I don’t know what being afraid feels like. However, it is not a good idea to start a war when Diatoran still hasn’t recovered from the previous battles,” Caspian said.

“These four countries attacked Diatoran and caused our people to lose their homes. Should we just let that go? That’s incredibly frustrating!” Balthazar said.

“Of course we can’t just let that go,” Caspian said.

“What other ideas do you have, then, Caspian?”

“We can have them cede some of their territory to us and pay reparations. We can recover for a while before planning for the future,” Caspian said.

“What if they don’t want to?” Balthazar asked.

+15 BONOS

“Then, we can put on a pretense of starting a war. After these countries are intimidated, they will surely pay us obediently,” Caspian stated calmly.

“What if they aren’t intimidated?” Balthazar was still a bit worried.

“These countries are not to be trifled with. What should we do if they aren’t fooled by our act?”

“If you ask me, we should just send out our troops. Why go to all that trouble?”

“Yes! We should start a war immediately and expand our territory!”

Several generals were eager to ask for permission to go to war. They had discerned Balthazar’s desire—to seize this opportunity to expand Diatoran’s influence.

“We have succeeded in winning every battle we have fought in precisely because We u were on the side of justice.

“If Diatoran suddenly launches an attack on other countries, we’ll become demons who invade everywhere, and it’ll be incredibly hard for us to achieve victory in that case,” Caspian said.

Everyone gave Caspian’s words serious thought upon hearing him.

“Vadesia, Astronia, Filren, and Estrya have been planning secretly to strike against Diatoran. They’ve also created some minor skirmishes within our maritime territory. This has gone on for a long time.

“If we don’t extinguish these countries, they’ll surely attack Diatoran again after recovering from the previous battles. A large-scale war cannot be avoided.

“Rather than waiting for them to come, we should take the initiative to strike. Relations between these countries have taken a turn for the worse, anyway.

“If we strike against them now, we’ll be starting a defensive war at most, not at full invasion. We must make these countries pay a hefty price,” Balthazar explained his opinion in a long speech.

Everyone finally had a realization. Since it seemed that Balthazar wanted to start a war, those who had initially objected to it were now saying something else.

“That’s a great idea, Your Majesty! As a country with plentiful land and abundant resources, Diatoran owns various cutting-edge weapons. We have several hundred more hurricane missiles, too. Defeating these countries will be a piece of cake!”

“Exactly! These countries have been giving us trouble consistently, Your Majesty.

+15 BONOS

“They’ve already come together in an alliance, so we must retaliate in kind.”

“You’re right. If we don’t beat the pulp out of these countries, they’ll attack us again in the future. Diatoran can’t just sit here and wait for misfortune to befall us!”

“Only by seizing this opportunity can we boost Diatoran’s national prestige!”

All the higher-ups were showing support for Balthazar to start a war. Those who had been on Caspian’s side and were objecting to the war had now changed their opinion.

This made Caspian feel somewhat helpless—these higher-ups were so fickle. Caspian was not worried, though. Even if everyone was on Balthazar’s side, there were still some words he had to say.

The Almighty Lord Caspian Chapter 632

Chapter 632 I’ll Never Abuse the Law

“We achieved victory, but it was at the expense of our soldiers, who had paid a huge price. Many men had died tragically,” Caspian said.

“If we start a war now, many more young people will die on the battlefield, and many more families will lose people dear to them. Have you thought about that, everyone?”

Balthazar and his supporters all felt somewhat guilty after hearing that.

Even Balthazar was hesitating, too, now. He wanted to take advantage of Diatoran’s victories and strike when the iron was hot, but he was also worried that problems would arise during the long-distance war—Diatoran would be doomed should that happen.

Balthazar had planned to summon all five War Gods and hold a group meeting, but things had just started to settle down in West and East Aridlands, so the other Champions had to stay there and command operations in the areas.

Only two War Gods showed up: the Diatoranian God of War and Benjamin Dax, the Champion of North Aridlands. Unexpectedly, though, Caspian had different opinions from him, which put Balthazar at a loss on what to do.

“War is cruel in itself. A soldier’s responsibility is to protect their homes and guard their country. Bloodshed and sacrifices are unavoidable.”

“Rather than being attacked, we should take the initiative to strike. Even if we don’t attack them, other countries will come together in an alliance against Diatorian. We can seize this opportunity to wipe these countries out!”

“Exactly! This is an opportunity that comes once in a blue moon, Your Majesty. We must not let it slip by our fingers!”

Everyone started to voice their opinions again. They wanted to argue with Caspian.

Balthazar was wavering once again upon hearing those higher-ups’ opinions.

“A massive war has just ended. We’re still suffering from the consequences. If we are to advance now, it’ll be very dangerous.

4

“If the International Alliance strikes against us as well, Diatoran will surely lose the war. Have you thought about this, everyone?” Caspian said sternly.

Everyone was in deep thought once again.

+15 BONOS

“If we embark on a long-distance military campaign, the International Alliance will surely not just sit by and watch it happen. One incident might lead to another, eventually snowballing into an international war!

“Many more people will be killed, and many more civilians will lose their homes. Have you considered what the civilians would want before?”

At Riverside Villa, Willow took a call. “Hello? Do you need me for something?”

It was Melinda who was calling.

“I’m calling to ask for your help, Willow,” Melinda said.

“With what?” Willow asked.

“You must help me, Willow. I can only tell you what I need your help for if you agree to help me.” Melinda knew it would be very difficult to rescue Henry, so she was also at a loss on how to ask Willow for help with that.

“Tell me what you want first.” Willow was not dumb, either. The Stewarts were all very crafty and calculating, so she had to get exact answers before anything.

“Henry was arrested by Caspian,” Melinda said.

“What? Wasn’t he safe and sound already? Why did Caspian arrest him?” Willow asked in shock.

“That’s a long story. Henry committed treason with the Hudsons. After Caspian learned about it, he had his men arrest Henry,” Melinda told Willow everything she knew.

Willow was immensely shocked. She did not expect Henry to have become a traitor alongside the Hudsons.

“Is this really true, Aunt Melinda?” Willow was in so much disbelief she had to reconfirm what she had heard.

“It’s true. Alicia told me about it. She was there. Henry and the Hudsons were locked up,” Melinda said.

“Ah, Henry made the wrong decision! How could he do such a thing?” Willow snapped.

“It’s too late to comment on that. He might be possessed. No one can save him. aside from you,” Melinda said.

“Traitors shouldn’t be forgiven. I can’t save him, either,” Willow said

+15 BONOS

“You’re Caspian’s wife, and Caspian’s the Diatoranian God of War. If you beg him for it, he’ll say yes to you,” Melinda said.

“After Henry became a traitor, the Stewart family would be looked down on, too. He should be killed. I can’t help you with that,” Willow refused sternly.

“Willow, Henry is family, too! How can you not do anything? He was possessed, and that’s why he did the wrong thing!” Melinda said.

“He’s been of age a long time ago. He should pay the price for his actions,” Willow said angrily.

“If Henry dies, we’ll have no son in the family. Please, beg Caspian to free him. He’ll listen to you,” Melinda begged.

“I have no relations with the Stewart family now. I’m the God of War’s wife. I can’t beg for a traitor to be freed. He must die!” Willow said.

“The family will be left distraught if he dies. Your grandma has gotten old and cannot handle such terrible news. Do you want to see the entire family collapse in grief?” Melinda said.

“I can’t abuse the law for the sake of my relatives. Henry is a traitor. He isn’t fit to be a member of the Stewart family. Caspian is strictly impartial, and I’m on his side,” Willow said firmly.

“You’ve changed, Willow. You disappoint me,” Melinda said.

“How have I changed?” Willow asked.

“You’ve lost your humanity. You’re completely different from before,” Melinda remarked.

“No matter what you say, I won’t beg on your behalf. I’m the God of War’s wife, and I must show my stance on the matter instead of covering up my relatives’ crimes,” Willow said sternly.

“Willow, please. We’re family, after all. Help Henry, please. You grew up together, didn’t you? And he wasn’t really a traitor—he wanted to be but didn’t really do anything. Do you still have no intention of helping him?” Melinda did not want to give up on her plan.

Willow was her only hope.

“Let’s discuss this after the results of the investigation are released. Who knows if he’s really defected to the enemy?” Willow snapped exasperatedly.

+15 BONOS

“I’ll ask Alicia about what had happened, then,” Melinda said.

“Sure. Let’s discuss this after the truth is revealed. If Henry really didn’t betray the country, there might be some room for maneuver,” Willow said.

In Jade Dragon Grand Hotel, Caspian and the other higher-ups were still yet to reach a conclusion regarding the decision to start a war.

After hearing everyone’s opinions, Balthazar was at a loss for what to do.

“What if we do this? We can defeat the countries one by one. We’ll deal with one of the countries first and see how it goes, alright?” Balthazar asked.

“This plan is great, Your Majesty! We can minimize the risks that way.”

“Exactly! If we can defeat one country, the others will be terrified.”

“Great! His Majesty’s idea is great. We can defeat these four countries one by one!

The Almighty Lord Caspian Chapter 633

Chapter 698 The King’s Great Amicorices

Stany higher-ups nimed to agree with Balthazar ideas

Baltazar noticed that everyone was in agreement same for Caspian, who kept steal the while

“What do you sumit. Caspian?” Balthazar asked tinkantis in’t doable Tour Majesty, Danocan it fit to start a war now,

*Caspian sart

After Caspian spotte, everyone looked at him in shock. The Caspian Lynch, the heit general who had never lost a single care, was afraid of starting a war?

Balifizzer had already taken a step back and made a proposal to defeat these countries one by one, but Caspian will disagreed with him.

Was Caspian iniment on going against the King's desire?

"Tell us what you think Caspian Balthazar said, his face dark

The otters present, such as Benjamin and join, had also noticed the expression on Baltazar's face. They were worried about Caspian If he persisted in singing a different time, Baraza might fy into a ragel

"Even if we're to start a war against these countries one by one, Your Majesty, fill take a very long time They won't just wait for us to attack them, too. They'll sssly help and support one another Irsatim, it wa't be against one country. The international Alliance will also see us as a thom in its neck. They'll surely intervene, and things won't look grita Vacas in that case," Caspian stated

"So we just wait for them to attack us? Why can't we strike first?" Balthazar aked, booking agy.

"We should take our time to reach a decision, Your Majesty. No need to be so basty," Caspian said

"This is a great opportunity that only comes once in a blue moon, Caspian. You're the bead of the Five War Gods of Diatoran, but why have you become so besitant to take action now? Balthazar said.

"Your Majesty, I think that our focus should be on assuaging the civilians and rewarding the soldiers who have died and their famili

"We should have the four countries pay reparations first. This is really not a good

-

+15 BONOS

“What if they aren’t willing to pay reparations? Won’t we have to start a war anyway?” Balthazar asked.

“We will get to it if it happens. I don’t have any good solutions for that now,” Caspian replied.

“I don’t want to let the opportunity slip by. If we lose the chance because of your hesitation, it will be hard for us to start a war in the future,” Balthazar said.

“There are no irreconcilable feuds between us and the other countries. Many young men eager to serve their country have died in the war only because the heads of all countries insisted on clashing against one another.

“Please reconsider, Your Majesty,” Caspian said, lowering his head.

“Lord Caspian, dying in battle is a soldier’s greatest honor!” a higher-up said. He did not like Caspian’s behavior, as Caspian was consistently acting in opposition to the desires of the King.

“That’s enough. You all can stop talking. We’ll discuss this later.” Balthazar had lost the desire to continue the discussion. Caspian’s constant opposition was very humiliating.

However, if they were to start a war, Caspian had to be the one leading the charge. If he, the head of the Five War Gods, disagreed with the decision to start a war, who else could possibly serve as chief commander?

Balthazar knew full well that Caspian was the most powerful one out of the Five War Gods—the other four could not even hold a candle to him.

He got up and left the conference room, followed by some of the higher-ups.

The discussion about starting a war was left unsettled due to Caspian’s adamant objection.

Caspian was the last one to leave the room. His consistent objection to Balthazar's proposal made the other higher-ups wary of walking alongside him -they would be in trouble, if this ended up enraging Balthazar.

Balthazar and some of the higher-ups stayed in the presidential suites on the topmost floor.

Benjamin, John, Sylvia, and the others were waiting for Caspian outside, and they walked into the elevator with him.

After they arrived at the ground floor, Caspian said to Macy, "You and the Phoenix Vanguard are to stand guard in the hotel. You must ensure the King's

+15 BONOS

"How about you, Lord Caspian? You need someone else to guard your safety, too, don't you?" Macy asked, worried.

"The King is the priority. You don't need to worry about me. You should already know what I'm capable of, shouldn't you? You just need to ensure the King's safety," Caspian said.

The King was staying at Jade Dragon Grand Hotel. This was not to be dismissed lightly, so Caspian treated it with the utmost importance. He had to ensure the King's safety.

"Yes, Lord Caspian!" Macy nodded. She dared not neglect this matter, either.

Laina and Task Force Rose were asked to stay, too. They were in charge of guarding Balthazar in secret.

Sylvia and Desmond had other tasks to attend to, so Caspian did not ask them to stay in the hotel.

Sylvia was to supervise the construction of the martyrs' memorial, and Desmond had to deal with the martyrs' corpses. Both were extremely important tasks that had to be completed within a very short time.

The remembrance ceremony would be held in a few days, so these tasks had to be completed as soon as possible.

Caspian, John, and Benjamin left the hotel in the same armored car.

“Why did you insist on opposing the King, Lord Caspian?” Benjamin said cautiously.

“I just stated my opinions. Deploying troops now is equivalent to digging our own grave,” Caspian said.

“His Majesty obviously wants to do so, though. You consistently went against what the King wanted. Do you not fear that he’ll strip you of your military rank?” Benjamin asked.

“He’s right! His face went so dark just now. You should be more careful, Lord Caspian,” John reminded.

“Should I be easily swayed like the others instead of stating my opinion? That’s basically the same as sending Diatoran’s soldiers to their deaths, isn’t it?”

“I must say what I have to say, even if that ends with my military rank being stripped,” Caspian said.

“You’ve changed quite a lot, Lord Caspian,” Benjamin exclaimed.

“How so?” Caspian asked, confused.

+15 BONOS

“A few years ago, you were extremely confrontational. You wanted to expand Diatoran’s territory and wipe out the other countries. The King didn’t agree to it, though, so you were suspended. But now, your roles are reversed,” Benjamin explained.

He was worried that Caspian would be stripped of his rank, actually.

“You’re right. I was young and arrogant back then. When you have lived for long enough and experienced enough, you have different opinions on anything.

“Now, I think that a peaceful coexistence is the better way out. Starting wars will only cause more casualties,” Caspian said.

“I thought that it was reasonable that we start a war, but after listening to your words, Lord Caspian, I think that deploying troops can pose a danger for Diatoran, too,” Benjamin said.

“Exactly. I agreed with starting a war, too, but you have a point, Lord Caspian,” John said.

“Reasonably saying, the King should be more mature and sensible than us, but why is he acting so rashly this time?” John asked in confusion.

“Who knows? They say kings and bears always worry their keepers—how unpredictable the King can be!” Benjamin exclaimed.

“He has his ambitions, probably. He wants to achieve great things!” Caspian said.

The Almighty Lord Caspian Chapter 634

Chapter 634 The Crafty and Narrow-minded Person

What do you mean by that, Lord Caspian?” Benjamin asked in bemusement.

Why was Caspian speaking in defense of Balthazar now?

“The King is seeing this matter from a different perspective from ours. If we start a war now and are able to defeat these four countries, Diatoran will become a significant entity internationally.

“His Majesty wants Diatoran to become stronger, but a huge price must be paid to achieve that. Diatoran has been laying low and enduring hardship for a long time before we finally emerged as a formidable entity.

His Majesty has waited for this day for a long time. We also finally succeeded in developing the hurricane missiles. Of course His Majesty will want to seize this opportunity to exhibit the power our country possesses!

Every ruler in history has the desire to enlarge his nation's territory. His Majesty merely desires to elevate Diatoran's status, which will deter others from invading the country. He's also acting in consideration of the people of Diatoran."

Caspian guessed at what was truly on Balthazar's mind.

Benjamin and John were stunned by his words—they did not expect him to understand Balthazar so well.

"If you know what he's really thinking, Lord Caspian, why would you still the notion of starting a war?" Benjamin asked in confusion.

oppose

"I don't consider what will happen far in the future. Both of you have seen for yourself how devastating the war was this time.

"Many Diatoranian soldiers have died on the battlefield, heavily impacting their families. I only care about what's happening in front of me," Caspian said.

"But you've been consistently opposing the King. What if His Majesty flies into a rage?" Benjamin asked.

"Exactly! What if he wants you to give up your authority over the army? What should you do then? You should be more careful, Lord Caspian," John said.

"Don't worry. He'll never do that," Caspian said confidently.

“We believe in him, but we can’t stop others from whispering about you behind your back!” Benjamin said.

“His Majesty is a righteous and just man. He won’t be swayed so easily, so you

+15 BONOS

“I hope so. I hope that we’re just overthinking it,” Benjamin said.

“You’re the head of the Five War Gods, Lord Caspian, and His Majesty is the King of Diatoran, but the two of you are now on different sides. One of you must take a step back and compromise, or this matter will never be resolved,” John added.

“John’s right. Maybe Lord Caspian will call the remaining three Champions over in the next meeting,” Benjamin said.

“It’s not that hard to resolve this, actually,” Caspian said meaningfully.

“What great idea do you have in mind, Lord Caspian?” Benjamin and John asked curiously.

“I don’t know where to start, but I’m sure it can resolve the conflict between the King and I while also bringing about the four countries’ submission to us,” Caspian stated confidently.

“It’ll be great if that really does happen,” Benjamin said.

“Let me think about it carefully for a while. When there’s a will, there’s a way,” Caspian said.

Balthazar was about to rest for the night in his presidential suite when someone reported to him, “Your Majesty, Sir Jerry Andrews has asked to see you.”

“Show him in.” It so happened that Balthazar was feeling troubled and wanted to chat with someone else.

“Yes, Your Majesty!” The guard nodded.

Jerry came in soon after.

“What do you want to see me for, Jerry?” Balthazar asked.

“I have some sincere words to say from the bottom of my heart, but I don’t know if I can say them,” Jerry said.

“Go on. You don’t need to be too polite in front of me,” Balthazar said.

“Your Majesty, Caspian was consistently opposing you just now. He doesn’t treat you with any regard at all!” Jerry retorted.

“He’s not doing that on purpose. He’s just saying what’s on his mind, and it’s not like he’s wrong. He still holds a high amount of respect for me, me, nevertheless,” Balthazar said.

+15 BONOS

“Lord Caspian commands respect far and wide and holds authority over at massive army. He’s also loved and respected by the people of Diatoran. It’s my opinion that you should be more cautious of him, Your Majesty,” Jerry said.

years,

“He’s been working for me for many and his loyalty has never wavered. You don’t need to worry about that,” Balthazar said with a smile.

“It’s because he was still young. Now, he’s trained his own armored battalion and is close with many higher-ups in court. I’m worried he’ll conspire against the state,” Jerry said.

“Now that’s ridiculous.” Balthazar laughed. “I’ve told him that he’ll serve as my successor in the future. The entire Diatoran will be his in the future. There’s no need for him to commit treason now.”

He did not believe that Caspian would betray him.

“What if he wants to be king earlier? You’re in your prime now, Your Majesty, and he surely wants to take the throne earlier,” Jerry said.

“You’re saying that Caspian will turn against me?” Balthazar asked, looking serious.

“I dare not insinuate that. I’m merely making a guess,” Jerry replied.

“Don’t make those ridiculous statements in front of me if you don’t have any concrete proof, or else I’ll punish you for trying to sow discord between Caspian and I!” Balthazar was suddenly enraged.

“Please forgive me for my slight, Your Majesty. I’m just reminding you to be cautious,” Jerry said.

“Never will I be wrong about a person. After undergoing trials and tribulations for so many years, Caspian has long matured. He has little ambition, too. I believe in him,” Balthazar said.

“You can never fully understand a person, Your Majesty. What if he’s always been hiding his real intentions? I think you can give him a test, Your Majesty,” Jerry suggested.

“What do you mean by that?” Balthazar asked.

“Only the inner circle knows of your arrival to Southlake City. If someone attempts to assassinate you, this surely can be tied back to Caspian,” Jerry said. “Why are you so certain about that?” Balthazar was confused.

“Southlake City is his home turf. Who else can do that aside from him?” Jerry said.

+15 BONOS

“Some secret agents from the enemy’s side might still be hiding in Southlake City. If someone really does attack me, it won’t be that surprising. Also, you can’t say that it’s related to Caspian just because of that,” Balthazar said.

“This is his territory. What if he deliberately leaks the persisted.

information?” Jerry

“This hasn’t happened yet, has it? Let’s deal with it later,” Balthazar said, displeased.

“We must prepare for that in advance. You should have your own guards, too, Your Majesty. The people guarding you now are all Caspian’s subordinates, and you should be cautious against them,” Jerry suggested.

“I took Lyndon and 20 guards here with me. No one can enter the topmost floor without permission,” Balthazar said.

“That’s too few! If Caspian really does commit treason, they’re useless against him!” Jerry frowned.

“That’s enough. You can stop talking about it. Caspian will never commit treason. If he wants to, why didn’t he strike when I was alone at West Aridlands and without anyone coming to my support?” Balthazar said.

The Almighty Lord Caspian Chapter 635

Chapter 635 Believing in Lord Caspian

“Your Majesty, I think you shouldn’t tell Caspian so early on that you want him to be your successor.

“Despite the expectations he’ll have after you tell him about it, he won’t be able to ascend to that high and mighty position so soon. If this goes on for some time, he’ll surely start to harbor ulterior motives,” Jerry said hurriedly.

“Four countries attacked Diatoran this time, and I had to head to West Aridlands alone. In such a dire situation, Caspian is the most suitable person to be king. This is why I’ve told many higher-ups about this,” Balthazar said.

“The enemy troops have been repelled, Your Majesty. To ensure that Caspian does not harbor the desire to commit treason, you can tell him that the matter of who will succeed you will be discussed later on,” Jerry said.

my successor, and “You’re joking. I’ve already promised Caspian that he’ll be he’s not the only one who knows about it, either. What will the higher-ups think of me if I go back on my promise now?” Balthazar said.

“But what if Caspian really wants to be king earlier? He might really try to overthrow you!” Jerry said.

“That’s enough. Stop. I believe in his integrity,” Balthazar snapped impatiently.

Jerry was going on and on about Caspian, painting him in a bad light.

“You also noticed during the meeting earlier that Caspian was acting strangely. Please reconsider, Your Majesty,” Jerry said.

“We have different opinions, but he’s fought in so many wars and done so many heroic deeds. In this war, we were surrounded by four countries.

“Thanks to Caspian, I was unharmed. He led the charge in many battles and succeeded in repelling the traitors and enemy troops. I would’ve become a prisoner if not for him.

“After that, he killed Robert and Viktor. No one’s achievements can ever compare to his. Personally, I want him to be my successor, but he’s also the most ideal. candidate judging from his achievements and deeds,” Balthazar told Jerry about bis opinion.

“Lord Caspian has achieved glorious achievements in war, Your Majesty, but his presence is too high-profile now. His reputation might even precede yours. What if he doesn’t listen to your command?” Jerry said.

+15 BONOS

r was not wrong.

Balthazar gave serious thought to Jerry's words. The latter Caspian was becoming increasingly powerful.

"Diatoran has gained great momentum after our victories, so this is a great time to strike. Caspian is the head of the Five War Gods, but he seems to have changed after the battle in Southlake City.

"He's become less proactive and started to sing a different tune from yours, Your Majesty. I think he just doesn't want you to be the most powerful ruler in the world! Caspian must never be the successor to the throne."

Jerry fanned the flames further upon noticing Balthazar's hesitation.

"In your opinion, who else is suited to be my successor aside from him?" Balthazar asked.

"I'm not sure, either. We still have to observe the other Champions for a while longer. I think that you should issue a command to Caspian, telling him to start a war. He'll surely obey your command. If he shows signs of disobedience, we can push him to the sidelines." Jerry grinned.

s pasu as you

"It's not just put it. Everyone must agree to it before I can issue a command. I can't just decide on it while ignoring everyone else's opinions on the matter, can I?" Balthazar said.

"We can use this to test Caspian, Your Majesty," Jerry said.

"No. If I've already promised something, I can't possibly go back on it. This is not a joking matter!" Balthazar said sternly.

"After returning to Dhord City, I'll gather the Five War Gods and hold another meeting. Majority wins, so we can start a war if a majority of them agree to it."

"Caspian's loyalty must be tested, Your Majesty. He commands a massive army. It'll lead to dire consequences if he ever wants to overthrow you. You should remove his right to be your successor," Jerry continued.

“He’s saved me twice. Five years ago, he aided me in suppressing the rebellion in Dhord City. When Quinton Hans held me hostage in West Aridlands, he traveled overnight to save me. If he really does harbor nefarious intentions, why would he do so?” Balthazar said.

Jerry could not very well go on in that case.

“That’s enough. You can leave now. I’m going to rest.” Balthazar did not want to bother with continuing this banal conversation.

“Yes, Your Majesty. I’ll take my leave now.” Jerry left the suite.

15 BONOS

“I’ve already called Willow, but she doesn’t want to help us,” Melinda said.

“What? Why did she become so cold and indifferent?” Donald said angrily.

“She said Henry should be killed because he’s become a traitor.” Melinda lowered her head, looking displeased.

“Does being the God of War’s wife mean that she’ll let her family die for the sake of the greater good?” Donald was mad as well.

“Ever since becoming the CEO of Southlake Corporation, it’s like she’s become a completely different person. Why would she break off all relations with us if she hasn’t changed?” Kate said.

“It’s true that we can’t blame Willow for not helping Henry,” Marilyn said.

Everyone was very surprised to hear that.

“We should blame her! Caspian listens to her every word, she can save Henry just by saying a few words, but she refuses to! Is she not cold and merciless?” Donald bit out.

“Henry is a traitor. He should be killed for that. Willow is the God of War’s wife, too. If she agrees to save Henry, she’s basically abusing the law to help her family,” Marilyn said.

“You two should be blamed instead. If you had raised your kid well, why would he become a traitor?”

“What do you mean by that, Mom? What’s the point of bringing this up now? Have you given up on Henry, too?” Donald asked.

“It’s not that I want to, but I have no choice, Traitors are the enemy of Diatoran. Who can save him?” Marilyn said.

“There’s one more thing. Willow said that she’s willing to help Henry if he only thought about defecting to the enemy but hadn’t done anything,” Melinda said.

“What are you waiting for, then? Ask Alicia about what happened, quick!” Marilyn said hurriedly.

“I’ll ask her now.” Melinda gave Alicia a call.

When Alicia saw her mother was calling, she answered and asked, “How did it go, Mom? Can Henry be saved?”

“We have no way of doing that. I called Willow just now, but she refused to help thought about it but not acted upon it?” Melinda asked.

+15 BONOS

J

“I don’t know about that, either. I did see him and the Hudsons have a meal with Robert at the same table, though,” Alicia said.

“So Henry really did act upon it? What should we do, then?” Melinda asked anxiously.

“But He didn’t have the time to do anything else because he was busy trying to save me. He just wanted to defect to the enemy but didn’t really do anything,” Alicia told Melinda everything she knew.

The Almighty Lord Caspian Chapter 636

Chapter 636 A Letter from Lilith That Was Written Before Her Death

“Sure. I’ll give Willow another call to ask her about the situation. I hope that she can help us,” Melinda said before ending the call and dialing Willow’s number again.

“Hello? What do you want this time?” Willow asked exasperatedly.

“Willow, Alicia told me that Henry didn’t do anything against Diatoran despite having thoughts about defecting to the enemy. He was roughed up badly by the enemy troops, too. You saw it.

“That proves he never defected to the enemy. If he had done so, the enemy troops would’ve treated him well instead of beating him into a pulp,” Melinda said.

“We’ll discuss this after Caspian comes back. He’ll surely know what’s up with that,” Willow said.

“Sure. You must try to paint Henry in a better light in front of Caspian, or he’ll end up dead,” Melinda said.

“Okay. If Henry hasn’t betrayed Diatoran in any way, I’ll try to help him. I can’t say for sure if Caspian is willing to release him, though,” Willow replied.

Caspian, along with his troops, returned to Riverside Villa. He had told Macy and the Phoenix Vanguard to stand guard in the hotel and ensure Balthazar’s safety. Meanwhile, he only brought several hundred members of the armored battalion with him.

The enemy troops in Southlake City were already defeated, so nothing unexpected should happen after that.

After her call ended, Willow heard the sounds of vehicles rumbling by from outside the villa.

She knew that Caspian had made his way back. She quickly walked out of the villa with Zoey, only to see Caspian come in briskly with his armored soldiers.

“Darling, you’re back!” Willow said excitedly upon seeing him.

“Yeah, I am!” Caspian nodded before entering the villa.

Zoey looked at Willow and Caspian meaningfully—she was concerned about their progress in having a baby.

“Have you arrested Henry, darling?” Willow asked.

+15 BONOS

“How do you know that?” Caspian asked, confused.

“Alicia told the family, and they called me, pleading with me to save him,” Willow said.

“I arrested him as he’s a traitor. We must not be lenient when dealing with people like him,” Caspian said sternly.

“But Alicia said that he has only thought of defecting and has never done anything harmful to the country,” Willow said.

“Alicia knows nothing. Henry has been in contact with secret agents from that country since long ago!” Caspian said.

“Huh? Are you sure?” Willow asked in shock.

“I’m the Diatoranian God of War. There’s nothing I don’t know about. I’ve already had someone investigate whatever’s up with Henry, too,” Caspian replied.

He knew about everything Henry had done.

Only then did Willow have a realization: Caspian had proof of Henry's defection.

Caspian explained, "Nicholas, Richard, and Henry worked together. The mass demonstration in Southlake City was directly related to them.

"They also egged the people on, causing them to curse me out, and they were the ones behind the group of people who clamored in front of our villa, aiming to harm you."

Willow was shocked to hear that. She would not have known about those incidents if Caspian had not told her about them. She had no idea that Henry had done so many inhuman things.

When those people surrounded Riverside Villa, it almost led to serious consequences.

"Are you still willing to plead on Henry's behalf after hearing these things?" Caspian asked.

"Of course not! He deserves to die a hundred times after his actions!" Willow said coldly.

"Great. Your bearing is closer to that of the God of War's wife now. You must never be soft-hearted when it comes to major issues of principle such as this," Caspian said.

"I understand now, How are you going to deal with Henry?" Willow asked.

+15 BONOS

"He's going to be executed by firing squad along with the Hudsons in a few days,

Caspian said.

TE

Willow would hear about this eventually, anyway. There was no harm in telling her that now. At least the Stewarts could be prepared—they could never stop it from happening.

Willow was thoroughly shocked to hear that. While it was true that Henry had done despicable things, he had grown up with Willow and was somewhat close to

r. She could not accept that he would be sentenced to death.

“Caspian, Henry’s my cousin, after all. Can you let him live, at least? You can even send him to the border!” Willow ended up softening up after thinking about it carefully. She wanted to try pleading on Henry’s behalf.

“There’s no room for debate. I’ve already made my decision. Henry took everything upon himself. I can’t be lenient toward him just because he’s one of the Stewarts,” Caspian said coldly.

Looking at the expression on Caspian’s face, Willow knew that this was already final.

“I’ve been tired recently, Willow. I’m going to take some rest. You don’t need to bother yourself over this matter. Henry’s an adult. He should’ve known that doing those things would result in this.”

After saying his piece, Caspian headed to his bedroom for some rest.

This was non-negotiable. He would never be lenient toward Henry just because he was a member of the Stewart family.

If Henry had been convicted for some other reason, there might still be room for negotiation, but Henry had defected to the enemy. This could never be tolerated!

Willow had a lot on her mind. She was completely at a loss for what to do. She sat on the couch, unmoving, as if she was deep in thought about some matter.

As Caspian lay on the bed, he thought back to the meeting today, and he was overcome by anxiety.

As the Diatoranian God of War, he must dissuade the King from starting a war, as countless casualties would be incurred should Diatoran command a military expedition.

+15 BONOS

Caspian's mind wandered. He suddenly thought about his foster mother, Lilith, who had impacted him deeply. He had lived with her until his teenage years, and he had been influenced by her values and ideas.

Caspian stood up and went to look for Lilith's things she had left behind after her death. In the pile of items, he discovered a somewhat yellowed envelope.

Nothing was written on it. This aroused Caspian's curiosity about the contents of the envelope.

When Caspian had gone to Lilith's house to pack up her things, he had just done so without inspecting any of them.

Caspian sat down and opened the envelope slowly. He took out the yellowed letter and started to read it carefully.

The Almighty Lord Caspian Chapter 637

Chapter 637 Caspian's Biological Mother

"We've spent many years together, but I have a secret I've never told you about. Both your biological parents are alive. Your father is one of the Masseys, named Logan, and your biological mother, Ms. Sherry Lynch, is also alive."

Caspian was already shocked by the first sentence in the letter. He had known that Logan was his biological father, but he had not expected his biological mother to still be alive

He already had someone investigate the Massey family. According to the results, Logan's wife, who was also Caspian's mother, had died more than a decade ago. However, Lilith said in her letter that his biological mother was still alive.

“I’ve never told you about this because I wanted to wait till you became an adult before telling you everything. However, you’ve been away from home for many years after joining the army, so I can only write down what I want to tell you in this letter.

“After the Massey family was impacted by some unforeseen circumstances, Logan entrusted you to me. When things became more stable for the family, your mother had a huge row with him and left the house. No one heard from her after that. I hope you will get to reunite with your family one day.”

The letter was not long, but its contents were already enough to give Caspian a shock

“This is great! Great!” Caspian yelled, overcome by emotions.

He had always been preoccupied by the identity of his parents. He did not expect Lilith to have always kept that from him. But he would not blame her for doing that as he had been little, and it would be pointless even if he had known that.

The letter only mentioned his biological mother’s name and nothing else. Caspian was not afraid, though. A name alone was enough. With his identity as the Diatoranian God of War, it was easy for him to look for a person in Diatoran.

“Caspian! Caspian! Are you okay?” Willow worriedly asked as she walked into the bedroom. Shocked by Caspian’s voice, she quickly came over to take a look.

I

Willow! Let me tell you some good news. I found my biological parents!” Caspian said, tears rimming his eyes.

Willow was shocked once again by Caspian's expression. It was rare for her to see Caspian cry. The last time that had happened was when Lilith had been murdered.

speaks. She rec'd te renew

Calm dower

wanted to find her recourcachers soc

Caspian nodded. The next gener lassed her passionate

Right at this crew ZITTODE DOE

greeted by the sight of Capone

Waumas

sarc.

Immersed in the loss. Chapranand. Wital verze roots appearance.

"Why did you come to our bedroom or hispoves annoying-be and Wigw had just started geothekerkommatuu

"I heard someone screening, soie. Doerksammaspatel awkward at the moment. Why did se di Caspanand Vaillones while they were going at it?

100

Willow freed herself from Caspram quickly, faceted rear reang vide

Nothing happened. You can go back to whatever youve been didoTTE, beeridones, Casperan said somewhat helplessly.

“Really? I saw tears at the corners of your eyes, though.
Zoewessediarossw She had interrupted the two of the area. So, she rightES VASCO

answers.

“I learned of the identity of my parents.” Caspian said excitedly. He was still immersed in joy, so he did not blame Zoey for interrupting her.

“What? You learned of the identity of your parents? Zoey had just heard Willow talk about how that had always been a mystery.

She was happy to hear such good news, too, but she had no desire to stay here and be their third wheel for any longer, so she left the bedroom.

“Willow, let’s do it one more time. I’m so excited now that I want to try both so excited, so we might end up having a baby if we do it now.
Caspian said, “Hey!” Willow laughed and looked at Caspian. What the hell was he saying, really? At this moment, though, Willow’s grin suddenly froze on her face. She said,

+15 BONUS

“Not yet. She had married into the Massey family in Dhord City before. So, you can start from there,” Caspian said.

That was all he knew.

“Oh, you need to look for another person as well,” Caspian added.

“Just say the name, Lord Caspian!” Laina said.

The Almighty Lord Caspian Chapter 638

Chapter 638 The Hidden Sniper

“Run an investigation on the side about the whereabouts of my mother-in-law, Caspian said.

“Huh? Isn’t your mother-in-law Kate Massey, Lord Caspian? Has she gone missing?” Laina asked in confusion.

“No. You didn’t know this, but Kate isn’t Willow’s biological mother. The woman you’re going to search for is named Irene Olson.”

“Irene Olson?” Laina was somewhat bemused. This was her first time hearing that name.

“This mission is more difficult than the one you gave me just now. Do you have any other leads?” Laina asked, finding this tough.

“She was driven out by the Stewarts. If finding her is so simple, what do I need you for? You must find her within the shortest time possible,” Caspian ordered.

“Yes, Lord! I’ll get this done as soon as possible,” Laina answered.

After ending the call, Caspian was overwhelmed by emotions that refused to subside. He fell into a deep sleep, his heart filled with excitement.

On the other side, Willow was preoccupied. After learning that Henry would be executed by firing squad, she was torn and at a loss for what to do. She wanted to tell the Stewarts the news, but she feared they would be unable to handle it.

However, she would feel bad if she were to keep this from them.

“Are you okay, Willow?” After coming back with some water, Zoey saw Willow’s uneasy expression.

“I-I’m fine,” Willow said, shaking her head.

“Why do you look preoccupied, then? What happened?” Zoey asked.

“I’m met with something I’m unable to resolve, Zoey. I feel troubled, and I don’t know who I can vent to about this,” Willow said with a frown.

“You have me, don’t you? Did Caspian bully you?” Zoey asked.

“No, no. My cousin Henry will be executed by firing squad in four days as he’d committed treason. I feel helpless now. What do you think I should do?” Willow

+15 BONOS

“What? Caspian’s going to have Henry executed by firing squad?” Zoey was shocked to hear that.

“Yes! Although he’s my cousin, Caspian refuses to spare him because he places righteousness over family loyalty. There is nothing I can do about this now,” Willow said, troubled.

‘Are his crimes really unforgivable? Must he be executed?’ Zoey asked.

“Yes. Caspian holds proof of Henry’s treason,” Willow said.

“Why are you sad, then? If he committed treason, his execution is reasonable. As the Diatoranian God of War, of course Caspian must execute the law fairly,” Zoey said.

“I don’t know how to break the news to the Stewarts,” Willow said.

“There’s nothing you can’t tell. It’s not your fault, anyway. It was Henry who decided to be a traitor, and he deserves this punishment,” Zoey replied.

“I’m afraid that the family can’t accept it,” Willow said, worried. The Stewarts would surely be extremely horrified to hear the news of Henry’s impending execution.

“The news can’t be contained, and they’ll have to hear about it eventually. You might as well think about things that make you happy,” Zoey advised.

“Like there are any at this point,” Willow said.

“Caspian learned of the identity of his parents. Isn’t that worth being happy about?” Zoey laughed.

Willow knew that as well. Caspian had been troubled about the identity of his parents for years. Now that he had learned about it, both he and Willow should be happy.

“You’re right. Caspian finally learned about the identity of his parents.” Willow forced a smile.

When Laina was patrolling the topmost floor of Jade Dragon Grand Hotel, she suddenly noticed a flash of light on the higher floors of a building some distance away.

Face set, she looked there with her binoculars, only to realize that a sniper was there, right at the spot where the flash of light had appeared.

+15 BONOS

“A sniper has placed his aim here. Protect the King!” Laina shouted.

All members of Task Force Rose learned about this through their communicative devices, and they were immediately on guard. A group went to search the building opposite the hotel, aiming to capture the sniper.

“Something’s happening. Protect the King!” The members of Task Force Rose arrived at Balthazar’s suite. Lyndon and the guards standing outside became anxious after hearing their voices.

Lyndon broke into Balthazar’s room and shouted, “Your Majesty, hide, quick! A sniper is trying to assassinate you!”

Balthazar was standing beside his bed, contemplating some questions, when he was startled by Lyndon’s voice.

At that moment, Laina was firing at the sniper. As she pulled the trigger, the sniper moved as well.

The sniper was aiming at Balthazar's room, not knowing that he was already exposed. Laina never missed a target the bullet was fired at the sniper's head.

However, the sniper had fired as well, aiming at Balthazar's room.

When Lyndon entered the room to see Balthazar standing there, frozen in place, he suddenly felt a bad premonition.

He pounced and pushed Balthazar onto the floor without hesitation. At this moment, a bullet broke through the glass and grazed Lyndon's back, ending up lodged within the wall.

"Protect the King as he leaves this place." Lyndon knew clearly that this room was already very dangerous. Balthazar had to be taken to a different place.

The guards dashed in and stood by Balthazar's side. They knew that this room would be extremely dangerous in the future. But they came up without a care for everything else anyway, as their responsibility was to protect Balthazar and ensure his safety.

In dire situations, the guards would form a human wall around Balthazar to protect him.

After killing the sniper, Laina discovered more flashes of light around them—not only one sniper was aiming at Balthazar.

+15

+15 BONOS

Shocked, she fired again and again, killing those snipers. The members of Task Force Rose moved as well.

The snipers in hiding continued to fire at Balthazar's suite. They noticed that he was going to leave the room, making this a great opportunity for them to fire.

Having a bad premonition, Balthazar immediately commanded, “Lay down! Lay down!”

He did not want to see his guards shield him from bullets. They were still young, after all. It would be such a pity if they were to die for nothing.

After issuing the command, Balthazar lay down on the floor, too. Lyndon and the guards reacted on time and lay down around Balthazar, protecting him..

Thankfully, everyone had evaded the bullets on time, and none of them were injured by this wave of bullets.

The higher-ups staying on the topmost floor were also shocked by the firing noises. They dashed to Balthazar’s room as well, wanting to protect him.

Realizing that they had been found out, the snipers could only tasked “ave for now.

They were all Astronian and Vadesian secret agents with killing the King of Diatoran.

Laina would never let them go without a fight, though. She ordered her subordinates to fire, and both sides engaged in a heated battle.

The Almighty Lord Caspian Chapter 639

Chapter 639 A Close Call

Many soldiers were already standing guard around Jade Dragon Grand Hotel. Right after bullets were fired, the soldiers knew that someone was attempting to assassinate Balthazar, so they immediately joined the fray.

Macy and her Phoenix Vanguard were shocked to see the flashes of gunfire in the skyscraper not far away.

“Phoenix Vanguard! Come with me! We’re killing these secret agents!” Macy ordered. She led the Phoenix Vanguard and charged toward the building.

The soldiers at Jade Dragon Grand Hotel fired aggressively. It was basically impossible for those snipers to leave, so they could only hide for now and think of ways to strike.

Macy and the Phoenix Vanguard dashed toward the building the fastest they could.

Laina knew that she was in danger when on the topmost floor. There was nothing that could shield her from attacks, and there was a high possibility she would be shot by snipers. Thus, she crouched down so that her position would not be exposed.

Suddenly, a bullet whooshed past the top of Laina’s head. Her heartbeat accelerated from the shock. She would have lost her life if she had been a bit slower!

After fighting on the battlefield for so many years, she had become very observant and developed very sharp senses. She knew that those snipers would surely kill her, and that was why she had hidden herself.

She knew that she could not stay here for too long as the snipers would not there and would continue firing at her.

stop

She bent down and took a turn into a corner where the bullets would fail to hit her before taking her phone out and calling Caspian. Someone was trying to assassinate Balthazar this had to be reported to Caspian as soon as possible.

Caspian was woken up from his sleep by the chime of his phone. He took the call immediately when he saw that it was Laina who called. “What happened, Laina?”

“Lord Caspian, someone is attempting to assassinate the King!” Laina reported.

Caspian had been bleary from sleep, but he was wide awake immediately after hearing that.

+15 BONOS

“How’s the King? What’s the current situation like?” Caspian asked.

“There are many snipers stationed on tall buildings near the hotel. They’re firing at the King’s room. His current status is unconfirmed,” Laina answered truthfully. She had no idea about the situation inside the hotel.

Caspian looked serious upon hearing that. If Balthazar was the target of snipers, it was very possible that he might not survive this!

“I ordered you time after time to ensure that the King is safe. Why would this still happen? If something happens to the King, you all will be punished following the military law!” Caspian was furious.

“I apologize for my carelessness,” Laina said.

“Okay, cut the crap. The King’s status is unconfirmed as of yet. You’ll continue working on countering the enemy’s attacks while I’ll go over there immediately and see what’s going on!” Caspian ended the call.

Someone attempted to assassinate Balthazar in his territory. If something were to happen, he would not be able to take on the responsibility.

He ran out of the bedroom as quickly as he could, startling both Willow and Zoey.

“Why are you running out so fast, Caspian?” Willow asked.

“I’m heading out to Jade Dragon Grand Hotel,” Caspian shouted.

“Huh? Why are you going there in the middle of the night?” Willow asked.

“I have an emergency to deal with.” Caspian was not in the mood to go into detail. He had to rush over there as soon as possible and make sure Balthazar was safe.

Willow and Zoey were surprised to see Caspian so ruffled. He was always calm and collected even when met with extreme danger, but he was obviously anxious today.

It was because this concerned Balthazar’s safety. Caspian dared not be careless.

“Armored Battalion! You guys are heading to Jade Dragon Grand Hotel with me now to guard the King!” Caspian shouted.

Caspian did not take all the soldiers in the battalion with him now. Some of them stayed to protect Willow.

There were many soldiers at the hotel. If the King managed to react on time, nothing should happen to him, not when he was under the protection of everyone else present.

+15 BONOS

Caspian and the soldiers drove to Jade Dragon Grand Hotel at breakneck speed. “What would make Caspian head to the Jade Dragon Grand Hotel so hastily?” Zoey asked in confusion.

“Something really important, perhaps.” Willow guessed.

“The enemy troops in Southlake City were all repelled, though. What other important matters are there? Have the enemy troops reemerged in the city?” Zoey asked.

“I’m not sure. Caspian said that he has to protect the King, though. Is His Majesty in the city?” Willow said.

Caspian had not told Willow about Balthazar's arrival in Southlake City since Balthazar's whereabouts were top secret, and Caspian was not one to tell other people about it carelessly.

"Maybe. Otherwise, why would Caspian look so panicked?" Zoey said.

"That's why he left after taking a call from Benjamin," Willow said exasperatedly, Caspian had left to take a call while in the middle of having sex with Willow.

Aside from matters concerning the King, what else would make Caspian so panicked?

"The King's arrival in this small city is quite surprising. I don't know what His Majesty looks like. Maybe we should go there and take a look?" Zoey said excitedly.

"Don't cause trouble, Zoey. As if we have the right to meet the King!" Willow said.

you're the God of War's wife, Willow. Of course you have the right to meet the King. If I come with you, I'll get to do so as well," Zoey said.

"The King's under attack now, so we shouldn't cause more trouble," Willow said.

Lyndon lay face down on the ground, listening to the gunfire sounds gradually subside, signaling that the enemy snipers were suppressed.

"Quick! Protect the King as he leaves this place!" Lyndon yelled.

The guards stood up immediately.

"We're evacuating this place, Your Majesty!" Lyndon helped Balthazar up.

"Let's leave before everything else!" Balthazar said after getting up.

+15 BONOS

At this moment, the Diatoranian higher-ups arrived outside Balthazar's room. They shouted outside the room, "How are you doing, Your Majesty?"

"Are you doing well, Your Majesty?"

"I apologize for being late. Please punish me for my tardiness!"

"Get out of the way! Don't block the way!" Lyndon shouted angrily. Did they have shit for brains? With how they were blocking his escape path, were they trying to kill Balthazar?

After coming to the realization, the higher-ups quickly stepped aside. Lyndon guarded Balthazar as they left the room, followed by the guards.

Laina continued engaging in battle after ending the call. However, she was suddenly met with a scene: a secret agent was aiming a mortar at Balthazar's suite.

Laina was panicked. If the missile was fired, it was very possible that things would be bad for Balthazar!

The Almighty Lord Caspian Chapter 640

Chapter 640 Caspian Came to the Rescue

Laina fired at the secret agent immediately. A rapid sequence of gunshots rang out, and several bullets hit the target. Before the agent fell, he had already loaded the missile into the cannon..

The mortar was fired in the wrong direction. The missile ended up exploding in the secret agent's room.

The deafening noise startled everyone. Many bodies in the room were propelled outward by the explosive force.

Macy and the Phoenix Vanguard happened to rush to the area near the building. When they saw the sudden explosion in the building, they quickly found a spot to hide in.

Balthazar and Lyndon heard the explosion, too.

“What happened? Why do I hear the sounds of an explosion coming from outside?” Balthazar said.

“We should leave this place first and find somewhere safe, Your Majesty,” Lyndon urged.

“Sure!” Balthazar nodded. He knew that they had to get away from danger now.

The missile was powerful, but not to the extent of causing mass destruction.

Macy led the charge into the building, the Phoenix Vanguard behind her.

Half of the secret agents in the building had already died or gotten injured. They were feeling somewhat lost.

Macy’s subordinates surrounded the building.

The secret agents were left with no escape route, but they had no plans of waiting here for their deaths. They stood guard next to the entrances to the elevators, the staircases, and some important corridors, getting ready to fight to the last ditch. Jade Dragon Grand Hotel was surrounded by more and more soldiers. No one knew the number of secret agents here, and the remaining military detail had to put their all into protecting Balthazar.

The Phoenix Vanguard, led by Macy, should have no problem killing all the secret agents.

They dashed into the building with Macy leading the charge and started going up to the higher floors. At last, all the secret agents were killed by Macy.

+15 BONOS

When Laina saw Macy lead the Phoenix Vanguard into the building, she knew the enemy agents had ended up dead. However, she had no idea if Balthazar was harmed.

She left the rooftop and returned to the hotel. When she arrived at the topmost floor, she saw Lyndon and Balthazar. Upon seeing that Balthazar was safe and sound, she exhaled in relief.

She would blame herself if Balthazar got hurt.

“I didn’t protect you well, Your Majesty. Please punish me!” Laina said.

“You’re not to be blamed for this, Laina. This happened so suddenly, and the fact that you could organize an effective counterattack is already very impressive,” Balthazar said.

“Thank you, Your Majesty!” Laina said, overcome by emotions. She did not expect Balthazar to be so understanding—he had decided not to blame her for everything.

“If not for your efforts in eliminating all of the secret agents, I would surely be in danger even now. It’s me who has to thank you all,” Balthazar said.

“You’re too kind, Your Majesty. Protecting you is our responsibility.” Laina still found this somewhat unbelievable.

Not only had Balthazar not reprimanded or punished her, but he had expressed his thanks toward her.

“By the way, what’s with the explosion we heard just now?” Balthazar asked.

“An enemy secret agent was trying to fire a missile at you through a mortar, Your Majesty. But I killed him before he could. He had loaded the cannon before his death, though, and the missile directly exploded in his room,” Laina said.

Balthazar felt glad upon hearing that. If Laina had not killed the secret agent in the nick of time, he, Lyndon, and the others present would have exploded into shreds.

“You’ve done well, Laina. You’ll be rewarded after this wraps up,” Balthazar said.

“I dare not claim that I have done well, Your Majesty,” Laina said, terrified.

“If you hadn’t killed the secret agents on time, the missile would’ve been fired into my suite, causing serious consequences!” The thought of what could have happened scared Balthazar still.

+15 BONOS

Dealing with those enemy secret agents was a simple task for Macy and the Phoenix Vanguard, who completed the task within the shortest time.

They quickly returned to Jade Dragon Grand Hotel, as protecting Balthazar was their priority.

Soon after, Caspian came to the hotel with the armored battalion in tow. When he exited the car, Macy came forward to welcome him.

“Lord Caspian, you’re here!” She felt so much at ease upon seeing him—this was always the case whenever Caspian appeared.

“Report the situation, Macy!” Caspian commanded.

“We’ve already killed all the enemy secret agents, Lord Caspian!” Macy replied.

“You must not be careless. Those secret agents might still be hiding near the hotel,” Caspian said.

“Yes, Lord!” Macy nodded emphatically.

“Is the King well?” Caspian was most concerned about Balthazar’s situation.

“Don’t worry, Lord. The King is not injured,” Macy said.

Caspian nodded. “Got it. Continue guarding the building while I go up and see what’s going on.”

He was relieved now that Balthazar was fine. If Balthazar was injured in his territory, he had to take responsibility for it. Some people with nefarious motives might capitalize on this and claim that he was the one behind this assassination!

He was the successor to the Diatoranian throne, after all. If the King was assassinated at this key moment, of course Caspian would be suspected.

Just as Caspian was about to enter the hotel, Macy shouted in alarm, “Careful, Lord Caspian!”

She quickly ran to stand behind Caspian.

A bullet was fired from the building opposite the hotel, aimed at Caspian.

As Caspian realized that someone was attacking him, his face took on a serious expression. At every key moment, Macy would shield him from danger with her body.

Caspian quickly turned back. As expected, he saw a bullet fly toward him. He withdrew the Diatanium dagger, and the bullet directly collided with the dagger with a metallic clang.

+15 BONOS

This bullet was not ordinary—it was a rifle bullet. While blocking this high-velocity bullet, Caspian’s wrist touched Macy’s chest.

“Ah!” Macy shrieked coquettishly.

“Are you okay, Macy?” Caspian asked anxiously, thinking Macy was injured.

“I-I’m fine,” Macy said, her face beet red.

“Protect the King!” The armored battalion charged forward immediately. Some of the armored soldiers dashed into the building across the road and killed the sniper at the fastest speed possible.

The sniper had wanted to take the risk. If he could kill Caspian, he would surely be rewarded with a promotion. However, he did not expect Caspian to manage to block such a speeding bullet—this was extremely shocking.

“We’re safe now, Lord Caspian. I think you can remove your hand now,” Macy said, her face red. Caspian had looped his arm around Macy’s waist due to the dire situation they had been in.