

Married At First Sight Chapter 3732

Married At First Sight Chapter 3732 – Liberty had been taking better care of her skin, making it smoother than it was when she divorced.

She also wore light makeup for work every day, which added a touch of elegance. Sometimes, when she looked in the mirror, she couldn't believe the woman she saw was her.

Two years after the divorce, she had changed a lot.

Liberty smiled, "Tonight, I'll indulge a little with you, but after this, no more late-night snacks! Losing weight is too hard—I don't want to go through it again."

She knew that if she gained weight again, it would be hard to lose. She was in a good place—happy, financially secure, and Duncan spoiled her.

If she wanted to keep her figure, she'd have to watch what she ate and exercise regularly.

"I've heard people say that some men here admire you. They may not have confessed, but anyone can see it in the way they look at you," Duncan said.

Knowing Liberty was engaged to the fourth young master of the Lewis family kept those men from making a move, but they couldn't hide their admiration.

Liberty responded, "If I notice someone has feelings for me, I keep my distance and make sure they lose interest. Don't worry—I'm loyal in my relationships. Unless you stop loving me like Hank did, I won't give up."

With Hank, it was different. He cheated and found fault with her, so she eventually gave up on him.

When she was preparing for the divorce, she cried at Serenity's place. After years of dating and three years of marriage, she had given everything to the relationship, thinking they would be together for life. But it ended after just three years.

The man who promised to take care of her for life couldn't even do it for half of it.

He said he'd support her, but when she asked for money to buy baby formula, he asked her to split the cost.

Thinking back, Liberty felt calm. The pain was gone, and she had learned from it.

When she lived with Duncan in the future, she would keep her career, maintain her financial independence, and take care of her figure.

Duncan reassured her, "I'm not Hank. I saw you at your lowest, and I never judged you, unlike him. Liberty, when we have our wedding, make sure to invite Sonny's dad. Let him see you walk down the aisle as my beautiful bride."

Hank would be jealous.

Liberty laughed, "After all those years, you're still jealous of him?"

Duncan smiled. "I can't help it. You were with him first, you loved him for years, married him, and have a beautiful son like Sonny. I can't help but wish I'd been the one to be with you from the start. Why couldn't we have gone from school uniforms to wedding dresses together?"

Liberty said softly, "Everyone's path is meant to be. Maybe this is just the way my journey goes."

She accepted that she was destined for a second marriage.

But she felt blessed to have Duncan, such a good man, as her second husband.

Duncan sighed, "I stayed single all these years because I was waiting for you."

Liberty smiled, "You sure know how to say sweet things now."

Duncan chuckled, "When you're in love, sweet words come naturally. Look at Zachary—he makes Seren happy and makes her fall for him. Honestly, I think I'm even better than him."

He believed he was gentler than Zachary.

Even now, Zachary remained reserved around others.

Zachary's warmth was only for Serenity.
