

Married At First Sight Chapter 3859-3860

Chapter 3859

“Grandma, whenever you miss me, just call my mom, and I’ll come see you! But I bet we’ll be here every day. Auntie’s here, and we wouldn’t want to miss her.”

With the New Year approaching, Serenity and Zachary were also preparing to move back to the villa.

Following tradition, many family members were returning to Wildridge Manor, as set by the old lady. Though everyone usually preferred their homes in the city for convenience, they always came together at the manor for the New Year, honoring the family’s reunion custom. After the third day, everyone could go wherever they pleased.

The old lady had no daughters of her own, so she cherished this time to be with her family. On the second day of the New Year, when most married daughters returned to their parents’ homes, she often visited her daughters-in-law’s families, delighting in their lively reunions.

“Alright,” the old lady chuckled, “if I miss you, I’ll call your mom to bring you over. Or maybe I’ll come to your house for dinner—is that okay?”

Sonny’s eyes lit up. “Grandma, let’s go now! Pack up, and come stay at my house for a few days!”

Everyone laughed, especially the old lady, who hugged Sonny and called him her “sweetheart.”

After exchanging warm goodbyes, Serenity and Zachary saw Liberty, Sonny, and Duncan off.

“Seren, no need to see us out in the cold. Go back and get some rest,” Liberty urged, halting Serenity on the front steps.

Serenity watched as Sonny and Liberty climbed into the car.

“Auntie, goodbye!” Sonny stuck his head out of the car window, waving cheerfully.

“Sonny, make sure you listen to your mom!” Serenity called back.

Sonny nodded, pulled his head back inside, and cozied up between Liberty and Duncan, feeling safe and content.

In Sonny's eyes, Duncan was like a second father now. Sitting with his mom and Duncan filled him with happiness. He hugged Liberty, then climbed onto Duncan's lap, snuggling in and calling him "Uncle Duncan" with a soft, affectionate tone that softened Duncan's rough exterior. Duncan hugged him and gave him a kiss, but Sonny immediately laughed and complained about his prickly beard.

Laughter filled the car as they drove home.

After over an hour, they arrived. Just as they settled in, Duncan's phone rang. It was his mom, Mrs. Lewis.

"Duncan," Mrs. Lewis began, "Liberty came back with you, right? When will you bring her and Sonny to our house? New Year's nearly here, and we'd love to celebrate with them."

Duncan replied, "Mom, we just picked up Sonny from Wildridge Manor. We'll rest here a bit before heading over. We're also planning to visit the Stone family."

Liberty's aunt, Audrey, was part of the Stone family, and with Liberty back in town, visiting them was a priority—not only for family but also to discuss important matters about the Farrell family in Jensburg. Audrey and her relatives had returned to Wiltspoon before Liberty, and Mr. Jimenez was staying with them for care, so Liberty wanted to visit him as well.

Mrs. Lewis paused, then added with a hint of excitement, "That's all wonderful. But what about your news with Liberty?"

Duncan glanced at Liberty and replied, "I think I can make it to the Civil Affairs Bureau tomorrow to handle the paperwork. Liberty hasn't mentioned her availability, but I believe tomorrow should work."

Mrs. Lewis responded, "Try to go tomorrow. The Bureau will close for the New Year, and we don't want any delays. Once it's done, I'll have you review the betrothal gifts. If you're satisfied, I'll send them to Liberty's family. I've also had someone pick out several auspicious wedding dates, but you'll need to discuss them with Audrey and Serenity to choose a date that suits Liberty's schedule and family needs."

Mrs. Lewis understood how much Liberty was managing. As the eldest daughter and sister, Liberty had always carried a heavy load—first raising her younger sister and now taking on the responsibilities of the Farrell family. It pained Mrs. Lewis to see Liberty shoulder such stress. She wished Liberty could focus solely on her restaurant, but as the eldest sibling, Liberty’s sense of duty was undeniable.

Duncan nodded gently, “Mom, let’s go over all this when we get back. I know time’s tight, but I want the wedding with Liberty to be as grand as Zachary and Serenity’s was.”

“Absolutely,” Mrs. Lewis assured him. “Liberty will have everything Serenity did. She’ll be treated with love and respect, and we’ll make sure she doesn’t face any hardships with us.”

She was genuinely overjoyed that her youngest son, about to turn 37, had finally found love. She’d once hesitated, believing in traditional “well-matched” marriages, but after everything her family had been through, she now understood that happiness mattered most.

“Well, let’s discuss it when you get back. Hurry up—I miss Sonny so much!” Mrs. Lewis said warmly.

Though Sonny wasn’t her biological grandson, Mrs. Lewis adored him as if he were. Sonny was charming, kind, and affectionate, and her entire family cherished him. For Liberty’s peace of mind, they went out of their way to show her that Sonny would be embraced by the Lewis family.

Duncan chuckled, “Mom, I know you’re really just excited to see Sonny. When he’s around, I’m basically invisible.”

“Exactly,” she laughed, “Sonny’s just so much cuter than you. Now bring him home quickly; I can’t wait to see him!”

Sonny had recently spent over ten days in Annenburg, and Mrs. Lewis genuinely missed having him around. She and Duncan ended the call, and Liberty turned to him with a gentle question.

“Was that your mom calling?”

“Yeah,” Duncan replied. “She was asking when we’d be back. I told her we’d come after you’ve had a chance to rest—probably just in time for dinner. Is that alright?”

Duncan watched Liberty closely, hoping she didn't mind him making these plans on her behalf. Liberty simply smiled and replied softly, "Of course, that's fine. I'm not tired, so let's go as planned."
