

Married At First Sight Chapter 4134

Chapter 4134

“You’re new here, so you wouldn’t know,” the older security guard continued. “I’ve been working here for a while. The former eldest son of the Farrell family lives in this area, so I hear all the latest updates.”

“Of course, it’s not like the whole city knows about it. The media only spreads what they get their hands on.”

Meanwhile, Marco was completely unaware of the guards’ gossip. He thought he had covered his tracks well. All he cared about was executing the plan that night—eliminating Kathryn, avenging Shiloh and her mother, and reclaiming all of his mother’s private assets.

He refused to let Kathryn take everything for herself.

Marco blamed Kathryn for Shiloh and her mother’s deaths. He was convinced she had killed them.

But in truth, even if Kathryn had never existed, Audrey would have returned to claim justice for her mother, and the Farrell family would have still ended up in turmoil. Clarissa’s descendants wouldn’t have been able to seize power so easily.

Mr. Jimenez was still alive. He had been Audrey’s mother’s right-hand man and knew more about the past than anyone else.

As long as he lived, Clarissa’s side of the family would never win.

Marco and his men were nothing more than bullies who preyed on the weak. They wouldn’t dare challenge the powerful families in Wiltspoon, so they targeted Kathryn instead. Compared to those major families, she was vulnerable—an easy target.

And they despised her the most.

They blamed Kathryn for everything.

While the three brothers drove back to their company, Kathryn, who was taking a lunch break in her office lounge, received a message from Pedro, her informant in the shadows.

The evidence was all there—videos, photos, everything she needed.

She sat up, scrolling through the images and listening to the recordings.

So, it was finally happening.

Her eldest brother had found his allies—Shiloh's brothers.

But Kathryn knew those two men better than Marco ever could. They were reckless and greedy, willing to do anything for money, but they weren't smart.

In the recordings, Marco had outlined two possible attack methods. Kathryn made her decision—she would force him and his men into using the second one.

The first method involved staging a car accident. Marco and his men would stay behind the scenes, making it harder to pin anything on them. Even with recordings and videos, Marco could claim they were just venting and had no real intent to act. That would require an investigation, making it harder to gather undeniable proof.

But the second method? That involved Shiloh's brothers and Marco's men taking direct action. If they went through with that plan, Kathryn could catch them in the act, ensuring an airtight case against them.

Pedro called.

Kathryn answered immediately.

She knew her office was safe—no risk of being overheard.

She checked daily for hidden cameras.

Unlike Marco's house, where Erika, his former wife, had secretly installed surveillance.

Erika had suspected Marco of having an affair with Shiloh. To catch them, she had hidden cameras all over the place, hoping to gather evidence.

But life took an unexpected turn.

So much had happened that Erika never got the chance to use the recordings. In the end, she divorced Marco.

Before and after the divorce, she had come to Kathryn, spilling secrets that no one else knew—including the fact that Marco's home was still under surveillance.

Now, it was time for Kathryn to put all those pieces to use.
