

My Dreamy Old Husband

Chapter 136

That's impossible! My account is one of the most secure ones out there. Without the correct password, no one can log into it and I've never given anyone else the access to my account!

...

Wait a minute! I've only given my password to one person! No wonder Nate doesn't allow me to log onto the game immediately after I returned. So, this is what he has done!

She was speechless upon thinking about that.

On the exterior, Nathan might be an angel, but deep down in his heart, he was an evil monster capable of doing something as hardcore as raping and killing the Beast.

She seemed to have realized what went on from Call Me Taylor. In the span of a few days, Sirius had not only exterminated a few clans for no apparent reason, but he had also used hacks in the game. Even the system game manager was hunting him down. F*ck, this is going to be interesting.

Inside the game, everyone was beyond agitated as all of them wanted to kill Sirius, rushing toward his spot in that moment. Apart from that, it seemed that they even appointed a clan master of the game to deal with him.

In reality, Sophia quickly typed on the keyboard to inform the people who had Sirius surrounded. 'Guys, calm down. I don't know anything.'

Everyone else simultaneously answered. 'Go to hell, you monster! The clan master is on his way here!'

Sirius233 was too ostentatious and skilled in the game, which had annoyed many people. Since she was on a downfall, everyone else could not wait to pull her down and attack her before killing her altogether and regaining peace in the game. Apart from that, they could also divide her assets and equipment—of course, the latter was the most important.

Looking at her equipment, Sirius was on the verge of crying. All of her coins in the game had been squandered and nothing was left. Even the sword that she bought for 2 million was completely unusable as it was badly damaged. Nate, what the hell have you done with my account?

While mumbling to herself, Sophia scraped the remaining weapons that she could use from the inventory before sending it to a professional weapon refiner, NPC, for repairs.

While standing outside the store and waiting for the weapons to be repaired, there were many players next to her, looking as if they wanted to kill her to avenge the rage of other players.

Once they saw that Sirius's equipment was badly damaged and that the sword worth 2 million was still being repaired, a plan surfaced in their minds.

One of the swordsmen attacked her from behind without saying anything. Sirius quickly took out an ordinary sword to defend herself. Although she did not have any powerful weapons to protect herself while all of his other equipment were being refined, she was not somebody who could be easily bullied.

When their swords touched each other, she managed to keep up with the attack using her smooth tactics, but the opponent's equipment was much better than hers. It felt as if she was fighting with her bare hands at that point.

Seeing that Sirius was on the losing side, a couple more swordsmen emerged from the crowd and surrounded him. With the arrival of another few well-equipped players, Sirius was in a precarious situation.

Sophia looked at the screen attentively. After looking at the progress bar indicating the repairs of her equipment, she knew that everyone there would lose to her if she held on until her weapons were completely repaired.

However, at that moment, she was completely not a match for the few skilled players. Even though her fighting techniques might allow her to hold on for a while longer, it would only be a matter of time before she was killed if she could not get her hands on the equipment.

While facing the siege of the skilled players, she kept eyeing at the progress bar indicating the repairs of her equipment. 50%, 60%...

As Sirius's equipment in the game was one of the most advanced weapons, it took longer to repair. Seeing the tiny progress that it was making, Sophia was beyond anxious at that point. After being attacked by few of them, half of her Health Points were already gone. If she indeed died in that manner, the entire account would be for nothing.

Of course, she could go offline and choose a time when no one would be online to replenish her Health Points, but she would not be Sirius if she did that!

The surrounding crowd couldn't wait for Sirius233 to be dead and leave her equipment behind, so they shouted in a chorus, 'Kill him! Kill him! Kill this monster!'

At such a dangerous time, a beautiful figure suddenly landed from the skies and stood between Sirius and the other swordsmen. Then, she said in a soft voice, 'How dare you!'

A swordswoman dressed in white descended from the skies with a sword in her hand. With just a wave, a strong, silver lightning that emerged from the sword crossed the entire screen, immediately killing one of the swordsmen who intended to kill Sirius earlier.

Without another word being said, she pushed Sirius behind her back as a mode of protection and used her sword to release a powerful aura, shocking the crowd who wanted to take advantage of the situation.

‘With me here, don’t you dare take advantage!’

It was at that moment that Sirius was finally able to clearly see the face of the swordswoman—she was his only wife at that point, Call Me Taylor.

In that instant, Sirius was filled with gratitude. ‘Taylor...’

Call Me Taylor was determined. ‘Hubby, I believe that you are not that kind of person. Don’t worry, I will protect you.’

With her back facing him, she pointed her sword at the entire world. After a month of not seeing her, her level and techniques had already improved a lot. She started to have the aura of a skilled player. After Call Me Taylor appeared, she spoke with a murderous tone. ‘If anyone of you wants to touch Sirius, you have to get over my dead body first!’

Moved by her actions, a wave of guilt flooded Sirius as that particular wife was one of the latest to follow him. Even though she had not enjoyed the times when he was wealthier, she still stuck by him throughout the entire period. At such crucial junctures, she even took the initiative to protect him.

Sirius looked at the progress of his weapon’s refinement. It was already 70% completed.

The appearance of Call Me Taylor had scared those who schemed on Sirius’s death away. They were aware that even though Taylor was not as skilled, she was Sirius’s wife, so she had received many legendary equipment to her. Her sword earlier would cost a bomb—with merely a wave, she had directly killed a skilled player. If only I could get that sword...

One of the leaders spoke first, 'There's no need to care about morale when facing a monster like him. Let's kill him together!'

'Let's go and kill the monster!'

A huge crowd of skilled players charged like monsoon, surrounding both Taylor and Sirius. Holding the sword that Sirius had given her, Taylor charged to the crowd, casting a shield on Sirius to protect him.

Even though she had legendary equipment, she was still on her own. As she faced a bunch of fierce attackers, she could not hold on for much longer.

Sirius eyed the progress of his weapon again and said anxiously, 'Taylor, just leave! You don't have to care about me! If worst comes to worst, I'll just head offline!'

Taylor did not reply to him. Instead, she pulled out her sword and continuously unleashed special attacks. The glow from her attacks surrounded her as if it was a dream, blurring her facial features...

He eyed the progress of his weapon again. It's already 89% completed! It's going to be ready soon!

She never expected that someone was willing to sacrifice herself to protect her. On top of that, it was a female account, which caused a surge of special feelings to flow through her.

However, she suddenly heard a scream. Sirius turned and saw someone stabbing Taylor from the back, forcefully stopping her attack. The colorful glow of her attack disappeared as her Health Points continued to decrease—from 10% to 3% in an instant.

The attacker did not stop there and continued to stab her again. With another scream, Taylor's Health Points plummeted to 0. Her body floated mid-air as she slowly disappeared along the colorful glow...

Sirius looked at everything that had just happened in front of him incredulously. Call Me Taylor is actually dead! She was killed in front of me!