

My Dreamy Old Husband

Chapter 469

Michael's tense face was replaced with a smile. "If she has a father who loves her, it's all worth it," he retorted.

In the end, Sean left the film studio with the files that Michael gave him and returned to Bayside City. He now knew too much and had to bear the heavy burden of keeping all those secrets—Justin's reappearance on top of Cooper still being alive and showing up in the same picture as Fass Michel at the same time. Would that coincidence prove that Fass was indeed Cooper?

However, Sean had other clues to work with, such as whether Cooper was related to the Michel Family from Eastern Europe.

That traditional family was a recluse, preferring to keep their members close knit and never accepting an outsider as their family head.

If he could learn more about the connection between Cooper and the Michel Family, things would be much clearer.

For them to be close, it would have to be family related. Woody Mitchell was Cooper's father—there was no doubt about that. Could the connection be from Cooper's mother's side?

Despite the fact that Cooper was still out of reach, news of the team having found solid evidence of him being alive pleased Sophia. She remained at the film studio even after Sean left, waiting for a male villain's final scene to end.

The days went by as usual. She came with the food truck on a daily basis and sat at a corner, playing online video games on her cell phone.

For the past two days, she seemed to have spent less time playing. Had she been playing video games, she would not giggle like a foolish lady.

She had been doing it while looking at her phone. One look at it was enough to reveal that she was happily chatting with someone.

A sense of uneasiness crept around Michael.

Finally, when Sophia was using the jacuzzi, he snooped on her cell phone. His sixth sense guided him to search for that person whom she was chatting happily with.

The name of the person read 'Dearest Brother'.

His profile photo was nothing but that of a scenery. Their chat history contained nothing of the Cethosian language—only English and a foreign dialect.

Apart from the English words, he could not decipher what those foreign looking fonts meant.

As he scrolled further down, Michael pursed his lips, unsure of what or how to feel.

He clicked on the profile 'Dearest Brother' on Instagram. After minutes of searching, he finally found a photo of 'Dearest Brother'.

As Michael zoomed into the picture, a good-looking man with delicate elvish features appeared in his sight. The man's deep blue eyes looked as if it held the canvas of a star-filled sky.

Linus Michel.

Ugh! They've added each other on Messenger! Michael could not believe his eyes!

According to Maria, all Sophia did was take a couple of photos with Linus and nothing else. They did not even exchange numbers with each other. So, when did they even add each other on Messenger?

He felt as if there were seeds sprouting from the top of his head.

By the time Sophia was done cleaning herself in the bathroom and exited, he had already put her cell phone aside and pretended to use his own.

After Sophia had dried her hair with a blowdryer, she suddenly remembered something and said, "I'll be doing a video call with an online friend to tutor me on programming, but I'll try to keep my voice down."

"An online friend?" Michael's ears perked up like a dog's. His sixth sense told him that the friend must be none other than Linus Michel. He pretended to read his script and asked nonchalantly, "What kind of online friend?"

When asked about her friend whom she had just met online, her eyes sparkled with excitement. "Yeah, he's that guy who took a pic with me. Guess what? When I searched for my father on Twitter, I stumbled onto his account and I added him."

His jaw dropped. You could do this on Twitter? So, this is how you found Linus Michel! You found him on Twitter and added him on Messenger?

Linus was merely someone with foreign ancestry, so why would he be using Twitter and Messenger?

Michael played cool, but warned, "Okay, but better watch out for online scams. Only locals use Twitter and Messenger and foreigners seldom use them. It's even rare to see a foreigner use both Twitter and Messenger."

Sophia switched on her computer and said, "You're wrong. I've done a few video calls with him before. He knows up to eight languages and doesn't even have a trace of the Cethosian accent. When he explained programming theories to me, he could easily beat any lecturer in Bayside University hands down. He had also practiced spoken language with me.”

“He told me that he lives in Eastern Europe and owns a huge castle in Africa. He even invited me over to Africa during the winter holidays to hunt for lions in the savannah.”

Once her computer was running, she adjusted her camera so that Michael would be out of frame. He was an international movie star, after all and ‘Dearest Brother’ would know who he was. It was better to be safe than sorry.

She then began her video call with Dearest Brother.

From where he sat, Michael glanced at the screen. The person in the video call talking to Sophia was clearly Linus Michel!

The both of them happily greeted each other and began chatting in an impressive mixture of three different languages. When they were done, Linus began to explain the ‘Principles of Programming’ to Sophia in English. A focused and keen Sophia took out her notepad and took down notes in between questions.

Upon listening to him talk about programming for an hour, Michael felt like crap. He suddenly recalled what Sean said—let Sophia unknowingly become close to Linus.

In spite of how reluctant he felt, Michael had no choice but to allow both Sophia and Linus to befriend each other.

After all, they were merely two strangers who made acquaintances online.

Moreover, as the second-in-command in the Michel Family, Linus was a legend when it came to programming. What more could someone ask for to have someone like him tutor Sophia?

Alright...

Michael tried to keep his jealousy at bay and tried to have positive thoughts. If Fass Michel was really Cooper Mitchell, then Linus would have been her uncle. Such a relationship would be favorable to him!

Once Linus was done with the tutoring, Sophia continued to chat with him.

“My friend and I have started an online gaming company. I’m even a well-known competitive gamer in my country... Yup... Wow, you develop online video games too? You even play ‘Swordsman Game’ as well?”

“But, you’re playing on the European server, which is too far for me! Tell you what, why don’t you create an account on the Cethosian server so that we can play together?”

“You also watch Taylor Murray’s films too? What a coincidence! I love him! He’s also our ‘Swordsman Game’ top gamer on the Cethosian server and his gamer tag is Scary Phoenix. You should really come and join us where the three of us can have a showdown together.”

“Scary Phoenix is a legend! ‘Doctor Invincible’ is premiering on the movie screens in our country on the same date in Europe and America. Remember to support us. I’m even active in his fan club too!”

It was months since the filming of ‘War Dragon’ had started. The filming crew moved through a few filming locations—from the Middle East to Africa and onward to Europe. Now that they were back in Cethos and inching closer to the final shoot, everyone gave it their all to finish the job.

By that point, Olivia was also stressed.

Now that her scenes were all done, she could have left, but she chose to hang out with the filming crew.

She dragged Nicole's name through the mud. Even when Nicole was hospitalized, she could not escape the same fate from the haters—some even accused her of fishing for sympathy.

Olivia had even hired haters to protest at the filming site, demanding that Nicole be removed from the cast. Even Taylor promised to have her role changed.

However, the filming was now coming to an end. Most of the cast had left, but the director still had not mentioned anything about replacing the lead actress.

What's going on? This is weird!