

My Dreamy Old Husband Chapter 749

Judge decided to hide in Sophia's house everyday after having a meal there.

Shae went out alone for a while that day and brought a new friend upon returning home.

"Hello, I'm Nicholas Fletcher. Who are you?" The robot that Shae brought home greeted Sophia as soon as it entered.

Linus brought Nicholas to his work studio and spoke, "This is Nicholas and is from the series of robots as Shae. He's merely coming over for an upgrade."

Sophia looked blankly at the direction in which Nicholas left.

Cooper noticed that she was often in a daze, looking as though something was missing from her life. After a pause, he quickly recommended, "Why don't I recommend some handsome guys to you?"

She looked slightly crestfallen, but she continued to joke in reply. "How handsome is he? Is he as good-looking as Taylor Murray?"

His face immediately darkened. Taylor Murray again! She's crushing on Taylor Murray!

Cooper gently smiled. "I promise that he'll be much better-looking than Taylor! Why don't you meet up with him? I guarantee that you'll definitely like him." It was rather obvious that he favored the mystery person since he couldn't stop talking about him. "He is of the same age as you and from a decent, powerful family. He started his business at a young age. Right now, he's the CEO of a listed gaming company. When he was a baby, I even held him in my arms before!"

Although he hoped that his little princess would always live with him, she would still have to marry someone in the future.

With the fear that she would meet another weird old man again, he thought it would be better if he selected a handful of men for her to choose from.

There was someone whom he coincidentally liked a lot, so he quickly asked Sophia to have a date with that person.

Sophia pouted in frustration. “But, Dad, my face and voice have not recovered yet. How can I go on dates?” He replied, “Don’t worry about that. Just meet him first and see whether he meets your standards. We can figure out the details later.”

Apart from that, he even emphasized, “He also has dogs and cats and doesn’t have a complicated history. I’m sure you’ll like him.”

Under Cooper’s persuasion, Sophia was experiencing her first blind date—she was curious about it and treated it as one of her life experiences.

Cooper had said many good things about the man to the point where she wanted to meet him.

Her father naturally accompanied her for the date.

Of course, he sat in the next room while Shae continuously transmitted the video to him.

The location of the blind date was in the VIP room of a random restaurant with dozens of guards outside the door.

Since it was Sophia’s first blind date, Cooper was also quite nervous.

Sophia finally met the man with her own eyes—he was rather good-looking and looked like he was around 28 years old. His tanned skin looked healthy and strong in a formal suit and contrasted with his unique short hair, which gave off a different vibe from other men in Cethos.

He also had a solid resume—he was born in a respected military family and graduated from Bayside University on top of being the director of a listed company.

The man opposite her had a solemn expression, creating a tense atmosphere where it felt like they were negotiating a business deal. "Hi, I'm Stanley Fletcher."

With an indifferent expression, he shook hands with her.

Sophia stretched her scarred hands out and returned the handshake. "Hi, I am... Lucile."

Stanley remained indifferent. "Oh, hello, Lucile. Please take a seat."

Only the both of them were in the big room. As it was her first blind date, she was so nervous that she broke out in cold sweat until she was unsure of what to say. However, Stanley, who sat opposite her, was flipping the menu. "What would you like, Lucile?"

She suddenly regretted her decision to turn up for the blind date. Although he looked decent, he was definitely not her cup of tea at all. I wonder why, but he looks like... a husky!

She merely wanted to return home as soon as they were done with dinner. However, since Cooper liked Stanley a lot, she figured that she would regard it as completing a task.

After taking her copy of the menu, she casually ordered two dishes. Just as she simply scribbled it on the notepad, the door suddenly barged open.

"Daddy, why are you going on a blind date?"

A sobbing voice rang.

Sophia was so shocked that she dropped the pen. When she turned, she saw a handsome young man rushing into their room with a little girl—she seemed to be around three years old.

After the little girl was placed on the ground, she ran as fast as she could on her tiny legs. When her shoes touched the ground, it squeaked and she reached Stanley amidst the squeaks.

While Sophia was still confused by what had just happened, the girl had already hugged Stanley's legs and cried out loud.

"Dad, why are you ditching me and Daddy? Even though you guys are unable to be married here, you did promise to take care of us forever! How can you go back on your words?"

You're a gay, so why are you on a date with a woman? I'm going to hit on you on Daddy's behalf!"

Stanley looked dumbfounded as well. Just as he crouched and held the girl in his arms, she laid a hand on his cheeks twice, shocking him even more.

Amidst her cries and smacks, the girl cried in desperation, "If you marry someone else, what will happen to me and Daddy? He can't live without you! You can't just leave him now that he's a gay! You're a gay who cheated us! I'll hit you! I'm going to whack you!"

Sophia was so shocked that her eyes widened. So, he's a gay who cheated on his family! How dare he do such a thing! He already has a handsome husband and a cute daughter yet he's still on dates?

Smack!

Sophia slammed her fists on the table as she stood up. Just when she was about to ask someone to teach this cheating gay a lesson, the little girl ran to her with her squeaking shoes and hugged her legs while she continued crying.

"Miss, please don't blame my Daddy for going on a date with you. His hands are also tied! Since he's a gay, his family has never agreed for him to marry my Dad. Both of them are pitiful! Please don't blame him. If you want to blame someone, blame me instead! It's my fault that he picked me up from the trash just to give me a complete home. Daddy's family had threatened him that they would throw me into the trash if he did not attend this blind date with you..." she sobbed.

How pitiful!

Upon looking at how the little girl was crying, Sophia's initial anger was replaced by infinite sympathy as she felt sorry for the three of them. "It's alright. There, there. I'm not angry."

Sophia crouched and carried the little girl. It felt nice to hold a little girl who smelled nice in her arms. Even though Sophia wanted to hold onto her longer, the situation did not allow her to do so. Instead, she took out a piece of tissue paper to wipe the little girl's tears and snot. After that, the little girl's innocent and beautiful face could be seen. What a beautiful little girl!

When Sophia saw the way the little girl sobbed, she felt sorry for her and spoke, "I'm not angry. Don't worry, I won't land your daddy and dad into any trouble." How is it possible that such a cute girl was left in the trash? Gosh, who was so heartless to have dumped her? Why didn't they dump her in my house trash instead?

The little girl choked on her tears, but it still continued to flow from her eyes. "Miss, you are such a nice person..."

Upon seeing the little girl's miserable expression, Sophia almost cried with her. What a cute little girl...