

My Dreamy Old Husband Chapter 1006

At the end of the drama's first season, the heroine finally got together with the male protagonist who was a labor contractor. Together, they persuaded the villagers and successfully developed the village, building a resort that promoted tourism in the area. Because of that, everyone in the village became rich and lived in happiness, causing their village to be known far and wide as a wealthy one.

At the beginning of the second season, the village was envied by another village. The resort was defamed by unethical reporters, causing its business to slack for a period of time.

Feeling extremely anxious, the heroine contacted Miles—her ex-boyfriend who worked as a reporter in the city—to have him write an objective news report for them. Miles had become the newspaper's editor-in-chief after a few years, so the news report he wrote would certainly be read by many.

Showing up again, Miles came to the village to uncover the actual situation. After learning of the truth, he promised to write a news report for the heroine and inform the public of the actual situation. Unexpectedly, the male protagonist stumbled upon their meeting and misunderstood them. Thinking that they still had feelings for each other, he chased after Miles with a hoe in his hand, scaring Miles into running along the river bank.

All the villagers came out and watched as the male protagonist chased after Miles by the river. Frightened, Miles took out his cell phone and hurled it at the male protagonist, causing the male protagonist's head to bleed. Angered, the male protagonist smashed Miles' cell phone using his hoe before throwing Miles and his mobile device into the river.

The heroine was so frightened that she jumped into the river after Miles to save him. Shocked, the male protagonist jumped into the river to save them both.

In the end, Miles was out of danger after being saved from drowning; he was quickly sent to the hospital. With the heroine's explanation, the male protagonist learned about what had actually happened, so he bowed and apologized to Miles. Furthermore, he went down to the river himself and searched for ages to retrieve Miles' cell phone and camera that had fallen into the river.

Unfortunately, the camera broke after being submerged in the water for too long, and all important, work-related photos saved in it were all gone. Overwhelmed with regret, the male protagonist slapped himself across the face.

However, he was surprised when Miles' cell phone managed to turn on, and some of the work-related photos Miles had taken were backed up on it.

In the end, Miles forgave the male protagonist since he was moved by the latter's sincerity. Returning to the city with the photos he had taken, he wrote a favorable news report for them and had it published on the newspaper's front page, attracting the society's attention and clearing the village of the false accusations. With that, the resort was able to resume its business.

The day the resort reopened for business, the male protagonist invited Miles over. Miles couldn't help taking pictures with his cell phone, expressing his wonder at the village's changes over the past few years.

As the camera zoomed in, the logo of the cell phone in Miles' hand was displayed perfectly. It was none other than the logo of Dragon Eye.

Everyone in the family was speechless when they finished the advertisement.

The corners of Cooper's mouth twitched. This advertisement... had no traces of a commercial at all!

The plot was very embarrassing, but after the episodes were broadcasted, Dragon Eye cell phones instantly increased in popularity throughout the vast countryside.

At the moment, Cethos was still internationally recognized as a developing and underdeveloped country. Its rural population was three times that of its urban population, so the market in the vast countryside, the suburbs, and the pastoral areas were huge.

In fact, Cethos' GDP per capita was very high, and its citizens' purchasing power was almost as strong as a developed country's. They put on a weak front internationally, knowing that one mustn't reveal their wealth. Furthermore, Cethos' Internet censorship prevented foreigners from understanding what Cethos was actually like through the Internet. Most of the citizens from other countries still thought that Cethosians were so poor that they couldn't even afford to eat tea eggs.

Therefore, many luxury brands weren't very optimistic about entering the Cethosian market. Dragon Eye had previously been afraid of entering the Cethos too; this was not only because of Cooper's apprehensions, but also because the brand was worried that Cethosians couldn't afford luxury goods. Consequently, they wouldn't be able to maintain a steady stream of sales.

After touring the area, a surprised Alice realized that this country was the complete opposite of what others assumed it to be. In fact, international news coverage of this country wasn't accurate at all; this country was so well-developed that one could scan QR codes to donate money while visiting a remote temple deep in the mountains. Smartphones were very common; Serpent mobile phones were commonly used even in areas that looked impoverished.

In the end, she decided to sell Dragon Eye cell phones in Cethos.

Sophia didn't disappoint her either; after a week of presales, a total of 3,000,000 cell phones were sold in advance. Dragon Eye cell phones' sales volume couldn't match Serpent mobile phones, but they put themselves firmly in second place.

Besides Dragon Eye cell phones' quality and reputation, Sophia's hard work also played a role in this.

Alice had chosen her as the agent mainly because she was so utterly shameless, using every opportunity to advertise the cell phones.

Cooper had been observing the presales lately. He found that Sophia's advertisements were everywhere, which was simply exhausting.

Inserting advertisements into TV dramas and films was fine, and it was necessary to promote the cell phones via LED screens on various buildings and large screens in different malls. However, Sophia also advertised Dragon Eye cell phones through TV commercials, web portals, video-streaming applications, pre-show ads, and posters at bus stops... She even had the advertisement for Dragon Eye cell phones spray-painted onto the walls in the vast countryside!

After watching enough episodes of 'I Am the Village Chief 2' for the day, Sophia cracked and ate melon seeds in the Edwards Residence while speaking to Cooper. "I've looked at the result of this presale, Dad. The sales volume in the countryside is about the same as the sales volume in urban areas—this shows that my approach is right. Let's look at the eastern coastal areas in particular; the sales volume there is the highest, nearly exceeding that of the urban areas. Other countries always go through the process of urbanization before going through the process of deurbanization; the rich are first centered in urban areas before they leave the cities to gather in the suburbs. Cethos seems quite different from other countries, though. The purchasing power of citizens in the countryside can't be underestimated, for there are still many hidden wealthy people. The prices of our cell phones and Serpent mobile phones are quite reasonable; other people spend thousands on Serpent for the sake of their pride, but they spend thousands on our cell phones for the phones' quality. Therefore, I placed emphasis on the cell phones' quality while advertising them. We can't use the same selling points as Serpent mobile phones since we can't win against them for the time being."

Listening to Sophia's words, Cooper stroked the cat as he nodded repeatedly.

He didn't expect Sophia to know quite well that the main buyers of Serpent cell phones were the petit bourgeoisie in the city. Since they couldn't afford Dragon Eye's high-end cell phones, they could only buy Serpent cell phones, which were the best low-end mobile devices. Evidently, Serpent did quite a good job in marketing its cell phones.

Sophia was now trying to avoid the main buyers of Serpent cell phones while looking for other breakthroughs.

Sophia then continued, "Dad, Uncle Linus—why don't you two think of some advertising slogans for me? The advertising slogans used in the countryside and the suburbs have to be changed from time to time. I came up with several ideas as well. How does 'Dragon Eye—you'd only need one for life' sound? Does it sound good to you?"

Cooper was at a loss for words.

"With quality as good as Dragon Eye cell phones, you're looking at your next family heirloom!"

"Dragon Eye cell phones are second to none; just wait till you hear praises from everyone."

Throughout the entire time, Cooper was rendered speechless.

Sophia said, "Dad? Uncle Linus? Say something! I'm thinking of organizing a sales promotion in the countryside. Those who buy the 16GB version of Dragon Eye cell phones will get free toilet paper, whereas those who buy the 64GB version of Dragon Eye cell phones will get a bucket of peanut oil for free. Since it's the busy farming season, those who buy the 128GB version of Dragon Eye cell phones will get a packet of chemical fertilizers for free..."

Cooper was still speechless.

After saying so much without getting a reply from Cooper, Sophia became angry. “Hmph!”

Cooper also felt helpless. He didn’t know how to respond to Sophia’s words, for what she said was obviously well beyond the scope of his knowledge!

Linus also frowned as he didn’t know what to say in response to Sophia’s words.

However, Sophia turned her head away and started speaking to Michael.

Michael had been filming his scenes in another part of the country recently. Still, he managed to find time to come home and take a look around every once in a while. Having just come back on this day, he immediately responded to Sophia and answered, “You’re right. The urban residents’ purchasing power is strong, but our cell phones haven’t become well-known in the country; we can’t win against renowned cell phone brands like Serpent if we compete with them in terms of sales volume in urban areas. We can market our cell phones in rural areas surrounding the cities. Let’s secure sales in rural areas to lay the foundation first before gradually entering the cities. I think that it’s okay to give those who buy Dragon Eye cell phones a block of cured meat or a link of sausages. If this is not enough, we can even distribute a packet of canola seeds to whoever enters the shop!”

Both Cooper and Linus were speechless.

My Dreamy Old Husband Chapter 1007

It looks like Michael’s still the one who understands me the best, Sophia thought as she sat next to Michael, rubbing her cat and watching him talk.

No matter how I look at him, he still looks so good because I love him—he even has so many suggestions!

Michael said, “I’ll introduce you to several reliable fertilizer factories; let’s go together when we have the time and see if we can work something out with them.”

“Sure! Indeed, my hubby has the most ideas!” Sophia smiled.

Michael continued, “We can even organize a lucky draw event; people will get to enter the lucky draw by purchasing the phone, and the winner will get a tractor. I know a few tractor companies that we can go and check out some other day.”

Excited, Sophia exclaimed and said, “Alright! We’ll go together!”

Meanwhile, Cooper and Linus were speechless. Michael is supposed to be an internationally renowned movie star—why does he know these kinds of people?!

Michael had taken some time off from work to see Sophia and Carmen; since Sophia wanted to survey Dragon Eye’s situation in the countryside, Michael trailed along happily. Cooper joined in as well because he wanted to know if his beloved daughter was walking down the right path.

They couldn’t go very far because of their tight schedules, so Sophia decided to visit the suburbs of Riverdale City first—the place where she grew up. Michael also took the opportunity to leave behind clues in Riverdale so that Cooper would notice them and locate his son!

The group went over to the tractor and fertilizer factory introduced by Michael first; after visiting the actual site, they decided to sign a working contract. After the factory visit, Michael took Sophia to Riverdale City to visit the place where she used to grow up.

Riverdale City had developed well over the years; just like any typical drama, they managed to turn the place into a tourist spot. Since this was Sophia’s home, Michael had also invested in several resorts and clothing factories to boost the town’s economy; he even built a highway and a railway here.

The town’s authorized Dragon Eye retail store was still under renovation, but Dragon Eye posters were everywhere to be seen—Cooper was speechless when he noticed an entire wall of cheesy advertisements about it.

“The Dragon Eye phone is the treasure of the village!”

“The latest agricultural news with the Dragon Eye in your hand!”

“Don’t fret when it gets wet—Dragon Eye is the best!”

Dragon Eye was one of Cooper's earlier products, and he passed it over to Alice after developing the device. He created a high-end cell phone that was primarily meant for businessmen, but Sophia had managed to turn it into...

He couldn't even recognize the phone that he made!

Being waterproof and fall-resistant, it was a magical machine that won the hearts of the villagers; the overwhelmingly positive response toward the product had exceeded Cooper's expectations.

Nonetheless, will the theme 'A City Within the Village' really work in our favor?

After that, Michael took Sophia to a small hillside where she used to live. There was an old, grey house where most of the paint on the wall outside had peeled off. Hidden deep in the mountains, the house was surrounded by beautiful greenery; it looked lonely and desolated, seeming as though it had been forgotten by the world.

Michael took out a key and opened the door of the house. As Sophia and Cooper walked inside, they realized that the room was quite clean. In fact, it seemed like someone had cleaned the house regularly with its well-placed furniture and decorations; it was as if the house owners had just left.

"Look, this is where you grew up. You used to sleep here." Michael pointed at a brick bed. Sophia was amazed as she sat on the brick bed and touched it gently. This was the place where she grew up!

The house belonged to Sophia's grandfather. After her two uncles had gone their separate ways, only Annabel and her parents lived there. When Annabel passed away, Sophia was sent to live with her grandparents.

When both her grandparents passed later on, the young Sophia was left unattended in this empty house while she struggled to stay alive; the village committee and the clan leaders decided to send Sophia over to her uncle's care and moved her to town. With that, the place became deserted.

Michael then inherited this house as Sophia's husband and preserved it well by hiring people to take care of it throughout the years. Sophia's school awards were still glued on the mud wall, and the tabletops were clean and dusted. Although they were old and yellowed, there were still some well-preserved photos in picture frames.

Cooper saw a picture of Sophia when she was a child. She looked dark and ugly, but her clothes were clean even though they looked old and frumpy. With her hair nicely combed, she looked very lively with a red scarf and a little bag as she posed for a photograph under the persimmon tree.

There were also photos of Annabel, but there were only one or two left. There was also a photograph of Annabel standing under the persimmon tree in front of their house; her head cocked to the side with a faint smile, but the picture was so old that it could no longer be restored.

Cooper held the pictures in his hands as he looked at photographs of Sophia and her mother standing under the same tree; his eyes welled up with tears.

I owe them both too much, too much indeed...

The weeds in the yard had been cleared up, but the old persimmon tree was still there. Carmen asked Linus what it was as she looked up and stood under the persimmon tree, and Cooper quickly took a picture of her.

They left after taking a group photo underneath the tree. Sophia wanted to take the photos with her, but she thought better of it and used her cell phone to take some photos of it instead.

Michael wanted to bring Sophia to the school she used to study at, so they took Carmen and left first.

Now, the village had completely transformed itself; as Michael walked through the village, the villagers quickly rushed out to see him. Not only was he a well-known movie star, he was also recognized as the greatest son-in-law in the village.

This master was so great that he opened factories, built roads and schools in the village and gave the villagers a comfortable life. Most of the villagers were descendants of the Johnsons, so he had relatives everywhere he went and they treated him with such kindness—it felt like he was everyone's own son-in-law.

Meanwhile, Cooper decided to stay at the house. Standing alone under the persimmon tree in silence, he placed his hand where Annabel had placed hers.

He looked up at the persimmon tree and remembered what Annabel had said to him 20 years ago.

“Coop, I planted a row of persimmon trees in front of my house using my own hands! I’ll bring you along to have a look at it when I have the chance—the persimmon fruits are really delicious! Here, these are some persimmon biscuits that I’ve made.”

It felt like their conversation was just yesterday, but once he opened his eyes, only the persimmon tree remained; Annabel was gone.

He raised his head as tears streamed down his face.

“Cooper...”

Unbeknownst to him, Linus was already at the entrance of the courtyard. On behalf of Alice, he had also followed Sophia to the village because he needed to survey Dragon Eye’s response in the village.

Cooper wiped his tears and looked back at Linus. “What’s the matter?”

“Some of the elders from the Johnson Family want to see you.”

Cooper nodded his head in response. A few seconds later, he slowly walked out of the small farmhouse and meticulously locked the front door and the courtyard’s gate before he left.

After all, this is Anna’s home...

There were many members of the Johnson Family in the village. As the area developed steadily over the years, their population flourished. The ancestral hall had been refurbished, and by the time Cooper arrived, he realized that there were many people waiting for him.

Linus had already inquired about them and introduced each person to Cooper.

“This is Sophia’s second uncle, and this is her grand-uncle...”

The elders sat from above and watched while the younger generations gathered around them. Cooper, whose identity was quite extraordinary, also sat down on a chair.

Although they did not know who this master was, the other master had reminded them that this master in front of them was even more powerful than the other!

My Dreamy Old Husband Chapter 1008

Cooper had secretly been to the Johnson Family Village a few times, but he never met with the members of the Johnson Family. When they learned of his arrival this time, they called Cooper over.

Sophia's great-grandfather was already over a hundred years old and could hardly speak clearly anymore. He was Annabel's grandfather, and he had been living in Annabel's uncle's house.

As the person with the most authority in the Johnson Family, Annabel's uncle spoke politely with Cooper and discussed the matter of moving Annabel's grave.

Since Annabel was an unmarried woman when they buried her, it was very inauspicious according to the village's rules; it meant that she couldn't be reincarnated after her death, bringing disgrace to the family. Since Cooper had come back as Annabel's husband and was recognized by the family, he was allowed to move her grave.

Cooper agreed to it and discussed the matter of moving Annabel's grave with her family, showing respect and being polite to his wife's elders.

While they talked about moving her grave, Annabel's grandfather engaged in small talk with Cooper. As he looked at Cooper's eyes with a face full of curiosity, he said in amazement, "Your eyes—are they naturally born that way?"

Cooper nodded. His pupils used to be black, but they gradually turned into a shade of blue when he entered adulthood; it was most likely due to the Michel Family's strong genes!

The old man cracked a smile. This was probably his first time seeing such a strange pair of eyes—they looked much more beautiful than the foreigners' eyes he had seen on television.

Someone spoke up and said, "Back then, Finian's aunt and her husband weren't able to conceive, so they adopted a child with blue eyes from abroad. That baby boy was very beautiful!"

Annabel's grandfather and Cooper continued their conversation. Meanwhile, the younger generations started to talk among themselves.

It seemed like the family rarely got together; they could only meet each other during big occasions like this and talk, but it seemed that Finian's aunt had quite the history. Once the topic was brought up, everyone joined in eagerly.

"The son that Finian's aunt had adopted was really smart! Oh, I heard that he even made it onto television because he could recite sonnets at the tender age of three!"

"I have no idea where they adopted the boy from. Hey, Finian—weren't you a driver at your aunt's unit? Tell us about it."

Finian, who was a guy probably in his forties, retorted angrily, "How would I know?! She's not even my real aunt. We never got along well, and she was reluctant to talk to me. I was just a school bus driver around their unit, and we'd only greet each other when we met. Besides, they were both university professors—they couldn't be bothered about their poor relative who drove a school bus! I don't even remember much; my aunt has migrated for over 27 or 28 years now! They would send a few letters every once in a while during the first few years, but they haven't been communicating with us for the past 20 years now. Heck, I'm not even sure whether they're still alive or not... Back then, my aunt said that she had taken some time off to go back home, but she came back with a child instead. Tsk, a blue-eyed boy! The school teachers asked if they had adopted the child from abroad or if some international student had given the boy to my aunt because they didn't dare to raise it! Those international students have messy social lives; they can only look for their father based on their skin color..."

Someone immediately rebuked his statement, "Hey! You're lying! After your aunt left the village to go to college, she completely forgot about her poor relatives and hasn't been back for the past 40 years!"

Finian argued loudly, "Nonsense! My aunt and her husband definitely came back 20 years ago! They both took leave from the university and hurried back to the village before going back to school. I was picking up my salary when they were at the finance department to claim their ticket money! I remember clearly that she had come back; they bought the ticket back to the village at 1.00PM and took the last bus back to the city at 8.00PM!"

The people laughed and continued to discuss Finian's aunt; the woman had left the village to go to university before becoming a professor. However, no one realized that their conversation had sparked Cooper's interest.

After Finian's aunt visited the village and came back to school, she brought a child with her—a boy with blue eyes.

A boy with blue eyes!

Cooper's blood from all over his body immediately rushed toward his brain as his fingers twitched uncontrollably in excitement.

A child with blue eyes!

He never thought of the possibility that his child would also have blue eyes. Even though there was only a quarter of the Michel Family's bloodline in him, it was possible that the child...

It turned out that he had been looking at this matter the wrong way!

Cooper continued to patiently discuss the matter of moving Annabel's grave with the elders of the Johnson Family before finally leaving the ancestral hall. After that, he went directly to the home of the man called Finian. Without any further delay, he asked him to recall the time his aunt brought the child back.

Finian was very respectful to this new master who suddenly appeared and said, "Give me a moment—I'll go and look for my payslip. The time is printed on it, and I've kept it all these years. That was my first payslip, so it was a very monumental moment for me!"

He rummaged through his closet as he added, "Huh, it's such a coincidence. Back then, I was only 19 years old when I went to the city and begged my aunt to help me out. She found me a job driving school buses. The school had withheld my salary for three months! I only received a salary of more than a hundred in the third month, but that was my first ever paycheck! Hence, I saved it!"

Then, he took out an iron box and found a yellowed payslip on the bottom. Cooper carefully took the payslip; the machine-printed payslip was very short, and it was dated a day after Sophia was born!

The day Finian received his salary was the day his aunt came back from her hometown; she was getting an reimbursement from the finance office for her bus ticket.

In other words, his aunt went back to the village at 1.00PM and returned to the city at 8.00PM that same day.

Sophia and her brother were born that afternoon!

Cooper stared at the payslip and asked Finian nervously, "What's the relationship between your aunt and Angelica, a nurse from the town's medical center?"

Finian replied, "Angelica is her cousin. They are both from the same generation, so they keep in touch with each other occasionally."

Cooper's heart was pounding in his chest. He was almost certain that the child Finian's aunt had taken away was his!

He asked carefully again, "That boy... Have you seen him?"

Finian answered straightforwardly, "I've seen him once. My aunt resigned two months in advance and migrated a few days later after they got the child. I borrowed the school's car to send them to the airport—I even saw my aunt holding the child! He had round blue eyes with blond hair, and he looked very beautiful! They said an international student secretly gave birth to him; it just so happened that my aunt and her husband couldn't have children, so they adopted him instead."

...

After listening to Cooper's story, Cooper patted his shoulder and walked out of the house. He stood at the entrance of that small farmhouse and lifted his head as he looked at the sky with tears pouring out of his eyes. I'm about to find my son! Do you see this, Anna? Our son is coming back soon!

My Dreamy Old Husband Chapter 1009

After the whole family wandered around the countryside for a while, it was already very late by the time they reached Riverdale City. When they arrived home, Carmen had already fallen asleep in Sophia's arms and looked adorable with her little red face. Sophia took Carmen to bed while Cooper printed out the photos he took today and placed them in his study room.

Annabel, Sophia and Carmen made up three generations born in different times and spaces, yet all of them had taken a photo under that persimmon tree. Cooper couldn't help but smile as he looked at the photos. If only Annabel was still around...

He imagined the scene and laughed to himself, but he couldn't stop himself from wiping away the tears that fell down his face.

When he came out of the study room, he saw Michael and Sophia hanging a big photo in the living room—it was the group photo they had taken earlier today in front of the persimmon tree. Michael had found someone to restore Annabel's photo and photoshopped her next to Cooper. Cooper, Annabel and Linus stood alongside Sophia's family of three, and all of them looked incomparably harmonious. Cooper felt tears stinging his eyes again as he stared at the group photo.

After Carmen had gone to bed, a few of them were watching TV in the living room. Sophia hurriedly turned on the TV to catch today's episode of 'I Am The Village Chief 2' and was relieved that they were just in time. Snowball ran over and Sophia started to rub the dog with her bare feet while catching up on the drama series, munching on some peanuts happily at the same time.

At that moment, Michael realized he had learned this bad habit of using his feet to rub the dog from Sophia.

Not only does she use her feet to play with the dog, she even rubs Snowball with them!

Tsk... Previously, Sophia had even scolded him for being rude and using his feet to touch the dog. Now, he realized that the whole family lived like noble lords who used their feet to touch their dogs.

Even his father-in-law and brother-in-law were stretching their feet and rubbing it around the dog's fur, so he was only following the family's tradition. Michael felt like he was finally part of Cooper's family.

...

After returning from the Johnson Family Village, Cooper resumed the search for his son. 30 years ago, only several women from Johnson Village had been able to enter college. Therefore, it was easy to track down Finian's alleged aunt, the woman who took his son.

Finian's aunt was a professor at a university in Bayside City. Her husband was her former classmate; after they graduated, they stayed and worked at the school until both of them became professors. She still couldn't get pregnant at the age of 30, so they mysteriously adopted a child before resigning and emigrating to someplace else.

He followed this trail and personally went abroad to look for them. Unfortunately, the whereabouts of the Cethosian couple who had migrated more than 20 years ago was still a mystery...

No matter how difficult it is, I must not give up. I have to find my son no matter what it takes!

Meanwhile, both the high-end and low-end versions of Dragon Eye were officially on sale in Bayside City; Alice was in charge of the only store in Cethos that sold the high-end version of Dragon Eye.

In a short period of time, dozens of retail stores selling the low-end version of Dragon Eye bloomed everywhere. With Dragon Eye stores sprouting up all around the country, they had a considerable amount of sales.

Sophia had spent a lot of resources to promote Dragon Eye; she put out advertisements everywhere with sky-high marketing costs, but she managed to achieve the desired effect of Dragon Eye in the end.

Michael had also gone abroad to shoot a movie, but since most of the scenes were based in Cethos, he returned to Bayside City after he was done with the foreign scenes. He shot the rest of the movie here, and he lived in Sophia's house every now and then.

While Cooper was busy looking for his son, Michael became more comfortable around the house; he even deliberately rubbed a few of Cooper's favorite cats with his feet.

Lots of great things were happening in Sophia's household—it started off with Bubbles giving birth to a litter of black poodles!

Meanwhile, Snowball had given birth to a few black Samoyeds!

Black as a shadow, they looked nothing like their father apart from the color of their fur!

Sophia was dumbfounded when she saw the two litters of black puppies. Then, she took a broom and walked toward the culprit, Corrado—she wanted to give it a beating first!

However, Daniel managed to fool Cooper into thinking that black dogs were an auspicious omen, asking him to descend the mountains and return to name the black puppies once they were born.

Ever since Alice left, Daniel had gone back to the mountains; this time, Cooper summoned him to rush back down and name the two litters of black puppies.

Black dogs are good since they can guard the house! The more black dogs we have, the better we can keep evil at bay.

Cooper had really been brainwashed by Daniel; not only did he raise a litter of black dogs to watch over the house, he placed several wind chimes by the door to ward off evil spirits. He even utilized his knowledge in astrology to develop a fortune-telling app, using it every day to calculate his luck before heading out.

He continued to dabble in such methods and was always on the lookout for auspicious dates to look for his son before leaving the house.

He's ruined...

While Cooper searched for his son all over the world with his fortune-telling app, Carmen acted in a few movies abroad under the stage name 'Gianna' and debuted in Cethos using her own name by endorsing the children's smartwatch by Michel Digital.

The managing rights to this smartwatch in Cethos was once again taken over by Sophia, and she chose Carmen as their ambassador.

Recently, Carmen had been busy with her career as well. She had movies to shoot and school to attend; when everyone thought she was not serious about it, she had unexpectedly gone through with it. While Carmen went to kindergarten, she also went to acting classes during her vacation.

Meanwhile, Dragon Eye had taken the digital market by storm and completely changed the dynamics of the cell phone market in Cethos.

Sophia listened to Cooper's advice and decided to plan a comeback banquet for herself. She had been back in Bayside City for more than a year now, but she hadn't organized a formal banquet up until this day. Since Dragon Eye's sales were doing well, she decided to hold a celebratory banquet and discussed it with Cooper.

Cooper had planned a grand banquet for Sophia before, but it was put on hold due to several issues; now was the best time to bring it up again.

The best option was to combine Sophia's comeback along with the celebratory and reciprocal banquet; after all, they were going to send the invites to the same group of people.

Since that was the case, it had to be a grand banquet.

Cooper personally came back to organize this banquet for Sophia. There must not be any mistakes for his beloved daughter's banquet! He had previously thought of gathering all the finest men in Bayside City and setting up blind dates for Sophia in secret, but now...

He pondered for a while before deciding on this plan. The thought of his son-in-law being only five years younger than him caused Cooper much grievance!

Sophia should be engaging with talented young men more often; he did not want to let Michael, the old man, tie her down!

Based on his own standards, Cooper chose a group of young and talented bachelors for Sophia to meet. Even if this fails, it would make Michael—that old guy—feel threatened at the very least! My daughter is not that easy to marry!

Later that evening, Michael was spending the night at Sophia's house. He was in the midst of soaking his feet while chatting with Stanley via Messenger.

'Uncle, It seems that Cooper—that old man—hasn't given up on the idea of getting Sophia on a blind date! Our dating circle went into a frenzy today, and they've been talking about it for two days straight! When everyone heard that you and Sophia divorced, tons of people became excited to fight for her! Apparently, Cooper even issued a list of criteria for his son-in-law! I'll send it over to you right now.'

My Dreamy Old Husband Chapter 1010

Men and women who excelled in all aspects of their lives, talented individuals like Stanley and Sean, men who had built an empire at a young age without falling in love or getting married—all of them were bound to be dragged by their families into Bayside City's blind dating club for high society.

People in this circle were respectable figures; most of them busied themselves with their careers and were not particularly interested in marriage or love. Some of them had been forced to join the club by their families, while some of them joined voluntarily to look for a partner they could benefit from. Needless to say, these people belonged in the inner circle of the elites.

Unfortunately, Stanley was notoriously known in this circle—whenever he was forced to go on a blind date, a little girl would rush in all of a sudden before hugging him and calling him 'Daddy'!

Eventually, nobody wanted to go on blind dates with him, but he continued to stay in the circle for the latest gossip; that was how he had found out about the latest news and immediately sent it over to Michael.

Michael wasn't entirely sure whether Cooper was behind this, but when he glanced at the list of criteria Stanley had sent over, he could immediately tell that it was Cooper's doing.

First of all, the candidate could not possess any criminal background—murder, arson, fraud, drug abuse, and crawling through a dog door were not allowed. Clearly, these rules were directed toward Michael; it seemed like that particular incident would haunt him for the rest of his life. The candidates were required to have a master's degree at the very least, and they had to be under 35 years old... nothing was in his favor! He even had to take his wife's family name! If anyone fulfilled all the conditions above, they could prepare a thorough resume with their photos attached and send it to the front desk of Mitchell International Energy and Technology.

His father-in-law was causing problems in the dark, and Michael viciously read the information over and over again.

As Michael suddenly caught sight of Chrysanthemum—Cooper's favorite cat—walking past him with its tail wagging, he placed his wet feet on Chrysanthemum and gave it a thorough rub. This cat was the descendant of a big, orange cat Cooper used to keep when he was younger, so it had learned its ancestral skill of fighting for attention; it let out a long meow. The cat was one of Cooper's favorites as he would kiss it and hug it while he raised the cat off the ground. Michael had often used it as a foot wipe and rubbed his feet against Chrysanthemum, and the cat would lick its own wet fur.

While it meowed at Michael continuously, he picked up the phone as he stood up and replied to Stanley's message. 'OK.'

'Uncle, why don't I go and try out as well? I can be your wingman and help you get rid of all the other ugly fellas!'

'Alright. Bring a few more people with you.' Michael agreed.

'OK.' Stanley messaged in response.

When Michael returned to the room after washing his feet, Sophia was still playing her game. As he beat around the bush and asked Sophia about her 'blind dates', she seemed clueless about Cooper's plans; she only knew that Cooper was throwing a banquet for her, and he had invited several celebrities and business partners too.

For example, he invited the fertilizer and tractor company's director whom they had signed a contract with two days ago.

After probing around, Michael immediately understood the situation; his father-in-law was up to no good again.

Michael would never allow a group of fresh, young men to parade in front of his wife, but since Cooper had sent them formal business invitations, it was hard for Michael to stir things up.

Oh, my dear father-in-law!

Weren't fathers-in-law supposed to be more fond of their sons-in-law the more they got to know each other? Michael had done so much, yet Cooper still turned against him!

He thought that he had become the perfect son-in-law; much to his surprise, he still couldn't win over his father-in-law's heart.

Since my father-in-law wants to play around, I'll just keep him company!

After writing his resume, Michael went over to Mitchell International Energy and Technology and submitted his application at the front desk. He wanted to see the look on his father-in-law's old face when he saw his old son-in-law there!

When Michael arrived at the makeshift matchmaking counter of Mitchell International Energy and Technology, he did not expect to see so many people present—there were familiar faces like Ian, who had just been circumcised not too long ago. He wanted to fight for a chance as well.

His d*ck was less than 10cm long, and Sophia had even laughed at it when she saw his nudies; who gave him the courage to come here? Did he think that circumcision would change the fact that his manhood was short and soft?!

Sophia wouldn't even look at him! Dana, that monster, is here as well!

Her assistant took her resume and went to the front desk, but she was rejected by the receptionist there. Dana protested with defiance and said, "Why can't I sign up? You guys never mentioned that women weren't allowed to sign up, am I right?!"

Unable to refute Dana's claim, the receptionist flipped through Cooper's requirements. Indeed, there wasn't a rule saying that women could not participate; what mattered was the candidate's age and conduct. It seemed like Cooper had forgotten about gender...

It was like a chaotic circus of freaks!

The atmosphere at the registration counter changed when Michael appeared.

Oh, the ex-husband is here to watch the show.

With Cooper's little act, Bayside City's matchmaking circle knew that they had divorced. Soon enough, this piece of news had spread far and wide.

"Are you here too, Uncle?!" Stanley looked at Michael with surprise.

As Michael turned around, he saw Stanley followed by a dozen young men from the Fletcher Family; all of them had a stack of resumes in their hands...

Michael was completely dumbfounded.

Before he could come back to his senses, a man wearing a black suit with gold-rimmed glasses entered the building.

Unable to stop themselves, the Fletcher Family sucked in a cold breath when they realized who it was.

"Why the hell are you here, Quinton?!"

Quinton, who had disappeared for so long, appeared once more!

Dressed in a business suit with a pair of gold-rimmed glasses, he looked like an intelligent gentleman with a resume in his hand. He smiled when he saw Michael and the others. "It's a fair competition for everyone—why can't I be here?"

After that, he placed his resume on the front desk.

The appearance of Quinton had the Fletcher Family's men slowly losing their composure—especially Stanley.

"Damn it, you son of a b*tch!"

The hot headed Stanley charged up to Quinton and attacked him. The Fletcher men rushed forward and joined in on the fight, whereas Michael tried desperately to pull them apart.

The hatred between Quinton and the Fletcher Family could no longer be settled with just a fist fight; even though Quinton had already shook hands and made peace with Michael, Stanley still couldn't control his emotions.

Quinton also recognized Stanley as the little son of a b*tch who shot him in the balls back then!

When enemies met, they lost all sense of control.

The two of them were engaged in such an intense scruffe that no one could pull them off each other.

Meanwhile, Cooper was actually upstairs watching from the CCTV, monitoring every boy that came in. The system would automatically analyze the other party's background, and he'd record their details down before combining it with their resume for the next assessment.

He was going to personally pick the right boys to attend Sophia's matchmaking banquet.

However, no one expected a fight to break out!

Cooper frowned and ordered the security guards who were at the scene, "Throw them out."

The alarm bell rang loudly as Dimon, the new security chief of Mitchell International Energy and Technology, led the security team and rushed out to hold down the Fletcher Family's men. In the midst of everyone's uproar, the entire Fletcher Family was thrown out together with their resumes.

The Fletcher Family's members only know how to fight!

At the entrance of Mitchell International Energy and Technology, Stanley and Quinton were still fighting.

Finally, Michael managed to separate the two with much effort; Stanley was still cursing and kicking when Michael dragged Quinton away from him.

He had a lot of mixed feelings about his brother. His birth disgusted him, but it was not his fault that he was born in Tanya's belly.

Since Michael and Quinton already agreed that they were even, he wouldn't bother him.

"I've warned you to never appear in Cethos again, Quinton! You know what will happen!"