

Mistaking a Magnate for a Male Escort

chapter 527

Just as she was thinking, she heard a familiar voice from outside. "Where am I? Why did you bring me here?"

"Don't be scared, Mrs. Berry. This will be your home from today onwards," Raina said with a smile.

"My home? This villa is as big as a small castle. How could this be my home?" Mrs. Berry sounded more panicked now. "Dr. Langhan, have you made a mistake? Please send me back to the hospital at once."

Hearing this, Charlotte put down her phone and ran out to greet Mrs. Berry immediately.

As she expected, Mrs. Berry was standing in the first-floor lobby, looking suspiciously around and looking like a lost sheep.

Raina stood beside her, trying her best to assure the older woman. "Don't worry, Mrs. Berry. Ms. Windt is here too—I'll bring you to see her."

"Miss?" Mrs. Berry asked, aghast.

"Mrs. Berry!" Charlotte flew down the stairs to greet her.

"Miss!" When she spotted Charlotte, Mrs. Berry ran over to her immediately. "There you are at last! Do you know how worried I've been for the past few days? Where have you been? The kids and I haven't managed to reach you by phone at all. I thought you got into an accident."

Here, Mrs. Berry choked up with tears. She had been having such a hard time in the hospital because she kept worrying for Charlotte and the kids. If Raina hadn't been around to stop her, Mrs. Berry would have left the hospital to search for them.

"I'm sorry, Mrs. Berry..." Charlotte looked very guilty. "Something happened to me a few days ago, and I lost contact with the outside world. I just returned here yesterday."

"What happened to you? Were you injured?" Mrs. Berry pulled Charlotte closer to her and inspected her up and down.

"Just a few minor injuries. It's nothing serious." Charlotte was deathly afraid that Mrs. Berry might notice the injury on her back. Pulling her to the sofa hastily, Charlotte said, "Don't worry about me now. Everything has been resolved."

"That's good, then." Mrs. Berry let out a sigh of relief. She shot a dark look at her surroundings and whispered to Charlotte, "Miss, let's go home. The kids are going to get off from school very soon. If no one picks them up at Happy Avenue, they're going to be frightened."

"Don't worry, someone will be there to pick them up," Charlotte said. She turned to Raina and asked, "Dr. Langhan, what's going on? Isn't Mrs. Berry supposed to be in the hospital? Why did you bring her here instead?"

"These are Mr. Nacht's orders," Raina said with a smile. "He was worried that you might be bored alone at home, so he got me to bring Mrs. Berry along."

"Ugh, what does he think he's doing?" Charlotte wrinkled her nose with distaste. "Mrs. Berry needs to undergo treatment for her condition. How could he take her out of the hospital earlier just to keep me company?"

"Don't worry, Mr. Nacht has already made arrangements." Raina pointed outside and said with a smile, "There's a small hut in the courtyard that has been empty for years. Mr. Nacht ordered me to renovate it and turn it into a clinic."

"I've already transported all the medical equipment here earlier today. In the future, you, Mrs. Berry, and the young masters can receive medical treatment in the comfort of your home instead of running back and forth from the hospital."

"Oh my goodness!" Charlotte felt rather stunned. No wonder the workers had been delivering medical supplies into the house earlier on—Raina was going to set up a clinic right here.

Zachary had done so many things for her without even telling her...

“Oh, I’m so confused.” Mrs. Berry’s head was spinning slightly. She gazed at Charlotte, perplexed. “Miss, you and that guy from the Nacht family...what’s the relationship between the both of you?”

“It’ll take me a while to explain that to you,” Charlotte said, patting Mrs. Berry’s hand. “Come upstairs to my room. I’ll tell you everything there slowly.”

“Okay!” Mrs. Berry nodded.

At that moment, Mrs. Rawlston walked into the room. “Ms. Windt, I’ve heated up the chicken broth for you. Should I send it upstairs for Mrs. Berry and yourself?”

“Yes, thank you,” Charlotte nodded appreciatively at her. “Dr. Langhan, thanks for your help. Please don’t let us trouble you any further.”

“Alright.” Raina smiled at her before leaving the room.

Charlotte pulled Mrs. Berry into her room. When Mrs. Berry saw how the room was decorated, she frowned immediately. “This room belongs to a man, doesn’t it? Is he that Nacht guy? Miss, have you gotten together with him?”

“Yes,” Charlotte said, nodding her head. Truthfully, she continued, “Sorry, Mrs. Berry. I should’ve told you earlier.”

Mrs. Berry sighed deeply. “Everyone makes their own choices in life, especially when it comes to romantic relationships. If you like him, you should be with him—I can have no opinion on that. I hope he’ll be good to you and the kids. However...”

Here, Mrs. Berry paused, looking rather uncertain.

“Mrs. Berry, what are you trying to say?” Charlotte asked.

"Miss, I'm just worried that an important family like the Nacht family might not be able to accept your children," Mrs. Berry said, frowning. "Doesn't your boyfriend worry about that?"

"Of course not..." Charlotte said, completely sure of herself, "because the children are his."

"What?" Mrs. Berry looked at her, stunned silly. "Are you kidding me? You are, aren't you? Isn't the father of the triplets that—that gigolo from Sultry Night..."

"Yes, that's him," Charlotte couldn't believe these words were coming out of her mouth, but she told Mrs. Berry the truth anyway. "Four years ago, I got set up by Luna, but things turned out like this..."

After she finished telling the whole story to Mrs. Berry, Charlotte continued, "Actually, I knew who he was from the start. But I thought he was irresponsible and unfit to be a father. In addition, I was scared of the Nacht family's power—what if they took my children and drove me away? That's why I never told him that he was the father of the triplets."

"However, when I got into the accident, he conducted a DNA test using Robbie's tissues. When he found out the truth, he did so many things for the children. I felt very touched..."

"I see," Mrs. Berry replied, sighing in disappointment. "No wonder our family keeps having all sorts of dealings with the Nacht family. For a period of time, I wondered if they were flies that wouldn't go away! So the Nacht guy had arranged for all of this to happen..."

"Truth be told, I had lots of worries in the past," Charlotte said, smiling bitterly. "I even wanted to uproot the family from H City after you and Jamie recovered. We could've found a new place to leave. However, so many things happened...perhaps this is meant to be."

"Well, since both of you have already settled this matter, don't think too much about it anymore," Mrs. Berry said reassuringly. "The children didn't like him much before, right? What about now?"

"They've been getting along splendidly. There's been a huge improvement, I believe." Charlotte felt extremely happy whenever she thought about this. "I didn't think he would be so patient with the kids. He put in a lot of effort to get close to them, you know."

"That's good, then," Mrs. Berry nodded approvingly. "Look how he set up a clinic for us at home. He even fetched me here from the hospital! I can tell he's very caring towards you and the kids."

"I overheard the medical staff talking about the clinic on my way here. Apparently, the medical equipment itself already costs more than one hundred million. Because they needed it to be ready-made, they brought the equipment straight from the hospital. Dr. Langhan will get customized ones from abroad later on..."

"He didn't tell me about any of this at all," Charlotte said, feeling guilty again. "He must have told Ben to look for Olivia to keep me company here."

"You did well to find a man as thoughtful as him," Mrs. Berry said, smiling. Here, her face clouded over again. "But will his parents agree to your marriage? Clans like the Nacht family tend to have complicated rules."

Here, Charlotte thought of Henry Nacht. She felt a little unsettled. Henry had disliked her from the moment he lay eyes on her, and he might not come to accept her in the future either.

"It's alright, let's take things one step at a time." Mrs. Berry patted Charlotte's hand cheerfully. "I've been lying in the hospital for two months! My bones are completely frozen! Now that I'm finally out, leave the kitchen to me. I'll make all of you something nice to eat."

Here, Mrs. Berry rolled up her sleeves and turned to leave the room...

Charlotte stopped her immediately. "Mrs. Berry, you just got out of the hospital. You should be resting now."

"Miss, you know me. I get all antsy and uncomfortable when I rest. I need to work if I want my energy back."

"Besides, the kids like my cooking. I haven't made anything for them in such a long time! Please grant my wish today."

"Oh, alright then."
