

Apex Chapter 496

Chapter 496

I Will Not Let You Live Doug immediately understood what was happening. He was smart enough not to have to be told too much.

This was because he had suddenly realized a problem through Javier's words. 'If some country with a significant force backing them up were to have their eyes on this medicine someday, it'd be a huge problem for us.

'Rather than letting this happen, we might as well ally ourselves with other countries and send them the benefits of our own accord.

'I'll give you the benefits you want, but I decide how much you receive.

'On the contrary, if I were to wait for you to try and steal it from me, you'd be the one to decide how much you steal or whether you would even leave anything for us.

'So Javier's making a brilliant choice by keeping the commanding power in his hands.

'This isn't just about working together with a particular force, but all of them.

'If we were to ally ourselves with all the countries, who could dare to interfere or even try anything stupid behind our backs?'

Thus, Doug had learned a lot from Javier's single tactic.

In fact, Javier had proven that his decision was indeed a smart one.

When a certain country's medicine manufacturing company found out that Reivaj Group was planning to work together, they immediately engaged with the latter, with all departments giving the green light to go ahead.

They would have a profit-sharing of 1:2, with Javier being 1 and the nation's medicine manufacturing company receiving 2. However, Javier would have to invest absolutely zero capital, plus he did not have to worry about sourcing the raw materials for the medicine for them. As such, he was making a hefty profit.

Even so, that country's manufacturing company was pleased about this. After all, they were already close to being wiped out of the industry entirely, so this sudden gesture instantly revitalized them. The country was filled with compliments for Reivaj Group, which had just saved a national company. Thus, thanks to the protection from various aspects, Reivaj Group's vaccine began being pumped into the market on a massive scale, earning them lots of profits.

Many medicine manufacturing companies' eyes were completely reddened when they saw how much money was being earned, but there was nothing they could do to try and earn a slice out of it

It was only up till that moment when everyone understood why Javier had cut out a quarter of the pie in his hands and shared it with a national company. With this, he could ensure that he would live in peace and enjoy a consistent amount of profits! As the vaccines were mass produced and foreign media platforms were reporting about this worldwide, these vaccines began to be shipped overseas.

However, the market overseas was much unlike what it would be within the country. Unfortunately, each dose of the vaccine was being sold for 8 thousand dollars, with no room for negotiation.

Previously, these foreign countries had sold medicine to Chinese for much higher than their cost, which was only less than 100 dollars. On top of that, the quality of the medicine had decreased by the time it arrived at China.

Thus, Javier was giving them a taste of their own medicine now.

Some foreign media platforms criticized Javier for being a heartless person who looked down on foreigners, but Javier did not think anything about that.

'We're of a different race, and you people alienated us in the past. So, why should I care what happens to you all now? The strong rule over the weak, so I will definitely take it if you give me a chance to fight back.'

Hence, Javier stood strong on his price for the vaccines being 8 thousand dollars per dose, causing all foreign countries to have no choice but to purchase them at that price, giving Javier a huge amount of profits.

Nonetheless, this did not stop some people from trying to earn a little more in between. Some people would resell the medicine back into the country in the past.

Now, however, it was the other way around. Some scumbags would resell the vaccines from within the country to foreigners.

They would try to get their hands on some vaccines through various means before selling them off at a price lower than 8,000 dollars, which was extremely profitable. A few international criminal organizations even began to get involved in this. They were no fools, after all. They would be sentenced to death if they were caught selling drugs, but they would only be sentenced to some monetary punishment or even two years of prison time if caught selling these vaccines. Thus, they would be released from prison in no time without so much as a scratch. Most importantly, the profits they would receive in return were great.

Unfortunately, Javier was a sneaky person himself. After Doug told him about this issue, Javier said, "That's easy. Send some men out and create some fake vaccines to reclaim some of our stolen profits."

Doug was slightly stunned, "Are you sure you want to do this, Mr. Kersey? This is fake vaccines we're talking about right now..."

Javier replied, "What's there not to be sure of? Have these foreigners ever treated us as humans? Even if they have, these fake vaccines won't kill them. Instead, they'll just be ineffective when they inject them. They'll get a dose of glucose! We should make them remember they should purchase medication through legit means!" Doug was surprised. "You're such a sneaky man, boss!" Javier rolled his eyes at him. "Why are you being so nervous? I'm not done yet."

Javier stopped Doug, who was prepared to leave, and continued. "After those vendors sell out our fake drugs, report them to the police and have them all arrested. Anyway, our country won't be able to verify whether the vaccines injected overseas are genuine or fake, nor should they care.

"On the other hand, since these people were being paid to supply genuine vaccines, they're committing a crime. As such, they'll be punished heavily enough to learn their lesson. You may go now."

Javier's orders left Doug dumbfounded.

'He really is a cunning man. Not only is he going to con them of their money, but he's even going to throw them in prison. 'He's literally planning on eliminating all the bandits we're facing right now. That's just insane. He's rounding them up mercilessly. 'Then again, I love his style very much. That's exactly why I am under his employment!

Anyone who dares to try and take away his profits will end up being beaten up so badly their faces are going to swell!

After Doug left, Javier turned on the television.

He originally planned on watching the reviews and feedback about his vaccine but coincidentally saw the specialist who had decided that the grass on the other side was greener. Just hearing his voice left Javier feeling infuriated.

"To think he even said that I wouldn't be able to develop the vaccine in the past and that it would be the foreigners who succeeded if it were ever to be developed.

'Yet, he's now changing his words completely!'

The man on the television said, "Why are the vaccines being sold even cheaper overseas? That's because foreigners refuse to acknowledge us! Because they think our money is much easier to earn!"