

Apex Chapter 520

Chapter 520

He Should Learn From Javier Everyone present at the meeting agreed that they would all work together, share whatever information they had, and focus on defeating the Raiders.

After all, they were not going to allow anyone who dared to strike against them to remain alive in the world.

After the meeting ended, Piers did not keep everyone around any longer. After all, the island was almost in ruins and was no longer suitable to accommodate guests.

Because the runway and the planes had been destroyed, the Whites arranged for a large ship to take them to the nearest pier before they could board another flight.

Javier was ready to leave with Zephiel, but Maya grabbed his arm.

“We’re best friends! You can’t leave! Jade and I are best friends too. We’re all best friends.”

This was the first time Javier felt her voluptuous chest on his arm, which sent Javier down an uncontrollable spiral.

However, he did not actually grab that opportunity to take advantage of her because of her mental state... Meanwhile, Renly walked over and brought news from Piers. “My grandpa has asked you to stay here overnight. Thank you for saving my sister.” Maya refused to let go of Javier’s arm and even went on to grab Jade’s arm as well. Besides, Piers had invited them all to stay...

Left with no choice, Javier agreed to stay the night.

However, Zephiel did not stay behind. Instead, Angelina left with him.

Everyone could tell that the Soroys and the Kerseys were allies. Now that she was so close to Zephiel, it obviously showed just how close their families were. Zephiel’s declaration that the Kerseys would definitely protect the Soroys was already the best proof.

Before leaving, Angelina nodded her head at Javier in farewell. There were many words that did not even need to be said for Javier to understand what Angelina was thinking.

What she meant with that nod was that he should be at ease. She would make sure that the old fox got back to the island in one piece. Also, their families would be even closer than ever now.

In truth, Javier understood that the Soroys might end up being attacked by others if Angelina did not stay very close to the Kerseys at that point. That afternoon, Javier stayed in a room that had not been destroyed yet and rested until evening before Renly personally went over to invite him to dinner. As they headed to the banquet hall, Renly’s expression was hideous while he looked at the destruction on the island.

This was completely understandable ... Javier would also have a hideous expression on his face if his family’s island had been bombed that badly. After all, this was a matter of dignity.

“Raiders, my *ss! The way I see it, they’re more like the Avengers. Losers who either lost a power struggle or had their powers stolen by someone else.

“They’re all a bunch of pieces of sh*t who defected to an outsider after losing a battle internally, even pointing their guns back at their own families in the end.

“Have they forgotten who their families are?! D*mn those b*stards! I’m going to make sure that every single one of them ends up dead!” Finally, Renly could not suppress the anger he felt inside and waved his fists in anger. Javier looked at him and gently shook his head.

“There’s no point in hating them. We may know who their members are, but we still don’t know who their leader is or where they’re based. On the contrary, they know everything about us, including our addresses, industries, strengths, and weaknesses. “Let’s take our time. This isn’t going to be an easy war to fight. If we play the game wrong, we may end up dead ourselves.”

Although Javier was a bit of a party pooper, Renly could not help but agree. What Javier was saying was indeed correct.

Just take the attack on the island for example... If they had not gotten lucky, the Whites might have already been wiped off the face of the Earth.

“Geoffrey!”

Renly gritted his teeth at the mention of that name, so it was clear enough just how much he hated this traitor.

When they arrived at the banquet hall, Piers waved his hand at Javier and gestured for him to sit next to him. First of all, Piers thanked Javier for saving Maya, and he even had Renly raise his wine glass to Javier.

Raising a glass at someone might not be a big deal, but it definitely had a deep meaning when it was Renly, the representative of the Whites, who did this.

In truth, Renly might be Javier’s rival, but he was still very thankful to this rival of his after that day’s incident.

After they raised their glasses, Piers asked, “What do you think of the Raiders, Javier?”

Javier shook his head. “I’m not sure. I haven’t done a lot of research on them.”

Piers laughed and scowled. “You really are a little fox. Just like your grandfather.”

Javier put on a very honest look but kept denying he knew how to deal with the Raiders no matter what Piers said.

After all, nobody knew what Piers was actually planning. Javier knew that Piers was a cunning man with years upon years of experiences on Javier, which was why he chose not to interact with Piers, just in case he ended up falling into the old man’s trap. By the time dinner was over, Piers still failed to obtain any useful information.

Javier had seemed like a complete glutton who was only focused on eating and did not know anything, nor did he have a plan in mind. However, Piers was able to see through Javier's facade. He thought that Javier was pretending to be a fool and was a complete master at it. Javier was so good at it that Piers even thought Renly should learn from him.

Hence, after the dinner banquet, Piers gave Renly a lecture and said, "I want you to learn from Javier how to conceal your intentions and plans.

"Just take today's gambling game for example. You may have indeed won on the surface, but the way you played represents how you will usually deal with matters. Based on everything you have shown today, your enemies will be able to clearly tell what you will do when you're at an advantage and how you will behave when you're at a disadvantage. Now that all this has been exposed, you will unknowingly end up in a bad state when you go up against them in the future.

"On the contrary, Javier performed extraordinarily well. All he had to do was lose 9 million dollars to completely determine both you and Connor's style of handling matters. If you were to actually go up against Javier in the future, he would predict your movements based on your actual character..."

Renly had thought that it was just a normal gambling match. Of course, he had guessed that it was a test to find out what their personalities were like, but he had not thought too deeply about the possibilities. Plus, his mindset on the matter was a little different.

After all, he had thought he should not lose the match because they were all on his home turf, and he could not dishonor his family.

However, it was exactly because he had thought about this aspect that he had ignored all other deeper aspects.

Now that Piers had reminded him what had happened, Renly realized he had indeed unknowingly revealed how he would deal with problems.

"I'm sorry, Grandpa."

Piers nodded his head. In his opinion, Renly's greatest merit was not that he was smart or anything else, but that he knew how to admit his mistakes whenever he made one. This point alone already made him far stronger than Geoffrey, his youngest son.

After all, Geoffrey was the one Piers had wanted to make the next family leader initially because of his intelligence and cunning. It was a huge pity that Geoffrey had a headstrong character and would not admit a mistake whenever he made one.

Should Piers have handed the family over to such a man, he knew that there was a huge possibility the Whites would be directly destroyed...

While Piers was giving Renly a lecture, Javier returned to his room.

The lights had already been turned off, and Javier thought that Jade must have been so exhausted that she had fallen asleep. After all, she must have been shocked by the explosion that day.

Javier wanted to soothe her emotions and help her relax, so he did not turn on the lights. Instead, he crept into the bedroom.

As he looked at her charming body, Javier's intention to soothe her instantly went a little astray. Unable to control himself, he reached out with his hand and went over to the bed, wanting to feel her curves.

However, right at that moment, Jade was actually having a shower in the bathroom.

She thought that the two of them could use the stress relief if Javier decided to touch her that night. But... Javier was already relieving his stress at that moment...