Chapter 2823

Chapter 2823

Charity frowned and asked, "Huxley is already dead. What about the compensation-"

The police officer sighed. "We've looked for Huxley's wife and parents several times. In fact, the Todd family is pretty wealthy, but they're reluctant to compensate at all on the grounds of Huxley's death. The Todd family acts like a deadbeat, so it's no wonder they raised such a sc*mbag."

"I heard Huxley earns over 100 million dollars every year, yet his family is so stingy when it comes to paying compensation of one million dollars. For some people, that miserly amount of money can save their lives, " the traffic officer could not help but grumble.

Charity was not surprised at all. Most rich people were said to have a lower moral baseline compared to ordinary people. "According to the law, even if the perpetrator is dead, his or her family needs to pay compensation."

"Yeah, but this requires the victim's appeal, and filing a lawsuit doesn't take one or two days only, what's more, the Todd family can afford a good lawyer, so they might win. However, the victim can't afford to wait. She needs the money. Miss Neeson, it's way too easy for people like you to earn 100 million dollars, but to many people, they can never earn this much in their lifetime." 1

Charity could tell that the officers were complaining. Even so, she was not mad. After some thought, she said, "How much does their medical fee cost? I'll pay for it. No matter what, I'm responsible for it."

Upon hearing her say that, the traffic and police officers became embarrassed.

"I do charity every year." Charity explained, "Of course, I hope this will be kept confidential because if I pay everything, the Todd family surely won't pay a penny. Regardless of whether Huxley is dead, the Todd family should pay however much they're supposed to. They must not pay a penny less to the family of the girl whom Huxley killed."

"That's for sure. That family is no fool." The female police officer looked at charity in a much gentler manner. "Miss Neeson, I thank you on behalf of them."

"I have no right to receive thanks. They're all innocent victims," Charity said glumly.

"You just wanted to stand up for the girl in the hotel."

Charity was guilty. In fact, all she wanted to do was take revenge against the Patterson family.

"We will take our leave and not disturb you further. If there are updates on this case, we might need to take a statement from you about what happened."

The police rose to their feet.

When Charity saw them out at the door, she heard the female officer, who looked down on the phone and glanced at it, say, "I think Chester's ward is right upstairs."

"Are you going to look for Chester to record his statement?" Charity asked.

"Yes. We should've done that earlier, but we heard that he hadn't been able to speak and that his condition had been unstable.

Though, he seems much better today."

The female police officer thought about the relationship between Charity and Chester and paused for a moment before she said, "His position is a lot worse than yours."

"Is it because of Huxley's death?"

"Not only that, but it's illegal to drive in the opposite direction of traffic on the highway. Although he did it in order to save someone, society would be in chaos if everyone acted like him.

Furthermore, his actions caused a pile-up involving a big lorry and a small car, and there were over ten casualties. Four of them are seriously injured and currently under emergency treatment in the ICU."

The traffic officer said, "I really have no idea how to describe this person. He's just a psycho."

"Please give me the list of casualties involved in the accident he caused. I'm willing to pay the compensation," Charity said with difficulty.

"No need. Chester's assistant compensated everyone and even paid extra. Even so, I must say that ordinary people's lives are just as important."

With that, the officer headed upstairs.

Chapter 2824

After the police officers left, charity stood rooted to the ground for a while.

Larissa, who was at the side, mumbled, "Oh, those poor victims. They're innocent. But if it hadn't been for Mr. Jewell, you would..."

She then sighed at the end of the sentence.

Charity darted a glance at Catherine. "After the police leave, can you please ask Shaun about it?"

"You don't have to say 'please'. We're good friends."

When Catherine headed upstairs, Shaun was talking to the police and traffic officers as an attorney.

However, she did not bother Shaun. Only after the officers left did she ask, "Is the issue very troublesome?"

"Chester's driving license has been suspended, which isn't a major issue. He can't drive in his current condition anyway. I was the one who decided for him to pay more compensation to the victims in the accident."

Shaun bit his tongue before he continued, "Not only charity's life matters, but the ordinary people's lives do too. By saying this, I hope you can-"

"I understand, and you're right." Catherine held his finger. "Hubby, if I happen to be in a dangerous situation like that one day, don't come and save me. I don't want to drag other people into the mess for my sake."

"Don't be silly." Shaun hugged her gently. "Humans are selfish. If I were in that situation, I might've done that too."

After that, they let Charity and Chester nurse their health in the hospital separately.

For the last few days, Max had been going to the hospital to keep Charity company for several hours.

Mrs. Langston also came with her son since she came to Canberra with Larissa by rail.

Looking at how her son was asking Eliza about her condition, Mrs. Langston had mixed feelings.

In her son's car on the way back from the hospital, Mrs. Langston asked, "what's going on between Eliza and Chester? I saw the news about Chester forcing himself on her a while back, why did he risk his life to save her this time?"

"He probably... likes her," Max said without revealing too much.

Mrs. Langston cast a deep look at her son. "Be honest with me. Are you interested in Eliza?"

Max's lips parted, and he hesitated for a few seconds before answering, "Yes, I am-"

"Didn't you say back then that you treat Eliza as your sister?" Mrs. Langston interrupted him in agitation. "When Eliza was at university, I even deliberately brought it up with you. At that time, both our families were happy for you two to get together, yet you said you weren't interested in her."

"I wasn't sure about the relationship at that time." Max could not possibly say that he was interested in her only because Eliza's soul had been switched with Charity's.

"According to the news on the internet, Eliza has slept with Monte and Chester before. I don't approve of you being with her." Mrs. Langston said firmly, "You can treat her as your sister, but if you want to get into a relationship with her and marry her, your dad and I won't approve of it."

Max instantly turned glum, "she didn't even agree to get into a relationship with me. Mom, you've gone too far by saying that."

"I've watched Eliza grow up, and I like her too, but what's the entertainment industry like? I heard it's very messy. If you hadn't been in this career and were simply in the business industry, marrying her wouldn't be an issue. However, you'll be assigned to lead the military one day, and the prime minister thinks highly of you. Her awful reputation will ruin your future."

Mrs. Langston said earnestly, "Over the last two days I've stayed over, a few people from the government department have come to matchmake you. If you choose a girl with a good background to marry, you'll have a father-in-law to back you and a bright future ahead. You might even become the leader of the military one day." 1
