Chapter 1061 The Saber Clan Had Always Been This Forceful

Nathan said coldly, “Yes, diplomatic immunity works for regular crimes. However, you are now suspected to be a threat to our national security, so you’d better stay here.”

Shocked and angry, William warned, “Nathan Cross, you’d better not cross the line. Even though you are the General of the North, I am not a nobody. My father will definitely come and save me, so you just watch out.”

Nathan smiled and turned to leave because he could not be bothered to continue talking to this kid.

Swiftly, Nathan and Colin went into the prison’s office together with George.

When everyone was seated, Nathan asked George, “How many guards do you have here?”

George answered loudly, “Sir, we have a total of thirteen officers and guards!”

Nathan nodded, “William is not any commoner. His father is the king of Eagleland, Cicero. William is his only child. Since he was not able to save William through diplomatic means, he might resort to extreme measures or even send someone on a jailbreak mission. You all need to be extra cautious. I will instruct Franklin Wilson to allocate more guards to you to reinforce your defensive strength.”

George replied in a low voice. “Yes, Sir!”

At this very moment, the alarm rang and army dogs barked loudly.

George and his eight men’s faces instantly changed. George said, “That is not good. Something is up.”

Nathan frowned. “Let’s go out and take a look.”

Soon, Nathan, Colin, George, and the rest of the team left the office for the front yard, only to realize that the front gate had been forced open.

A group of uninvited guests had broken into the Mid Channing prison.

Leading the pack was a young man dressed in a white suit. Next to him was a middle-aged man dressed in a major's uniform. Behind them were their men in either camouflage or black suits.

Two prison guards were down on the ground, wounded.

Another two guards together with two military dogs were barking at the man in white, as well as at his team.

This man in a white suit was none other than Philip Lane of the Saber clan, from Glyngarth in the East.

Philip narrowed his eyes and said, "So this is the Mid Channing prison where Mr. William is locked up without reason?"

"Yes, Mr. Lane!"

Philip's gaze fell onto the army dogs. His countenance dimmed and ordered coldly, "The barking is too noisy. Kill the dogs!"

“Yes, Mr. Lane!”

The middle-aged man in the major uniform pulled out his gun without hesitation and fired two shots at the two army dogs before them.

The two dogs died tragically on the spot as their heads exploded.

Having just come out of the office, George roared in shock and anger when he saw the scene, “Who are you to trespass onto military ground? You have even wounded my guards and killed my army dogs!”

The middle-aged man replied coldly, “I am Dean Haze, a major from Glyngarth. This is Philip Lane of the Saber clan, who heads the eight major families of this nation.”

The young master of the Saber clan!

The major of the Glyngarth military district!

George’s face changed slightly. They really have some background there. No wonder they have the guts to trespass military

Nathan answered coldly, "I don't care who you are. What are you doing here? And who gave you the right to wound others and kill dogs?"

Philip grinned and explained, "We are here to pick up Mr. William! As to who gave us the authority, I can only tell you that we of the Saber clan have always been this forceful!"

“How dare you!”

George could not help but roar out loud when he saw how rude Philip was to Nathan.

Dean glared at George coldly. “No, how dare YOU! You are but an insignificant captain; why did you not salute me when you saw me?”

George turned red when he heard that.

He is using his rank to intimidate others!

He had no choice but to raise his hand in salute to Dean. “Sir!”

Dean looked triumphant when he saw George’s aggrieved expression.

He pointed at the two wounded soldiers and sniggered, “Since you did not control your men properly, I’ve already taught them a lesson on your behalf.”

He then pointed at the two dogs with their heads split open. “I have also helped you deal with your dogs that have not been controlled properly. Now, as a senior officer, I request that you release Mr. William immediately. Otherwise, do not blame me for taking further action.”

George snuck a glance at Nathan before saying loudly, “I’m sorry, Sir, even though your rank is higher than mine, I am not able to release him as per your request without permission from Channing’s leaders.”

Dean said coldly, “I will contact the Channing leaders myself. All you have to do now is to release the person.”

George stood up straight. “I’m sorry, but without the proper procedure and without our leaders’ permission, I cannot release him.”

Dean replied angrily, “Fk you, who are you as a little captain to disobey me? Believe it or not, I can beat up every single one of you until you are disabled, and nothing will happen to me after that.”

major from Glyngarth, as a Saber clan follower he had the strong support of the clan in Glyngarth.

Injuring a mere captain? The Saber clan would have no problem settling the matter for him easily.

Moreover, he was here with the Young Master on official business.

No matter what happened, they would have the backing of the Saber clan.

At this moment, Nathan snorted, "Hoho, someone is really throwing their weight around, isn't he? But this is no place for a little major like you to show off your pride!"

"Colin!"

Colin walked out and glared at Dean coldly, "I heard that you like to look down on others with your rank. In that case, according to the rules, you should be saluting me!"

Dean widened his eyes, "Who the fk

Before he could finish his sentence, Colin’s eyes burned with anger and he raised his hand to slap Dean.

Dean was actually quite agile; however, he happened to have met Colin today, of all people. Colin’s slap was so swift that there was no way for Dean to avoid him at all.

All Dean could do was stare blankly while Colin’s palm loomed larger and larger within his vision...

Slap!

Colin landed a savage slap on Dean’s face, so ferocious that his mouth bled.

Shocked and infuriated, Dean reached for his gun.

The dozen of men behind him reached for their weapons, too.

However, Colin had already taken out his army identification and bellowed, “Open

An officer's identification!

Dean's furious face froze for a split second. It was then quickly replaced by a look of pure dismay.

He could tell with a glance that it was definitely an authentic identification!

He hurriedly took a closer look at Colin's card, which contained a picture of the man in a colonel's uniform and his name. Also indicated was his rank: Colonel.

This burly man before him was actually a colonel from the North Army.

Dean was completely aghast.

Before he could see Colin's specific position, the latter had already put away his identification. Colin roared frostily, "Now that you know my rank, where is my salute?"

Dean and his men were all stunned.

Colin is a colonel!

Dean is but a major!

Colin was two ranks above Dean, and they were in completely different leagues in terms of their army ranking.

Dean and his men could only salute Colin in full embarrassment. Together, they said softly, "Sir!"

Colin shouted angrily, "Did you not eat? I can't hear you at all. Louder!"

With flushed faces, Dean and his men were forced to salute him all over again. This time, they said loudly, "Sir!"

George and his team of guards could not help but feel redeemed when they saw this scene. Colonel Dunne did a beautiful job!

did you?

Colin looked at Dean and his men and asked emotionlessly, "What are you Glyngarth men doing here? You have trespassed into our area, don't you know that?"

Slyly, Dean said, "Sir, you belong to the North Army, but not to the South. Aren't you trespassing, too? We are all the same, so let's not make things difficult for each other."

Colin was about to combust when he heard that.

Philip Lane spoke up slowly at this point. "Colonel Dunne, Dean is here with me to pick up William. I would suggest that you don't stick your nose where it doesn't belong."

Philip's eyes were trained on Nathan as he spoke.

Philip was a little surprised at how Nathan was able to get a colonel to help him.

No wonder Nathan is able to mobilize military power to arrest Mr. William.

Obviously, he has Colonel Dunne as his huge support!

Colin said indifferently, "I don't care which family or clan you are associated with, and neither do I care which military district you hail from. If you have the proper paperwork, you are welcome to come and get the person. If not, get lost!"

Nathan suddenly said, "They can't leave yet. They have to apologize to the wounded and compensate their medical fees. Also, this Dean Haze actually had the audacity to kill army dogs. He must bury these two dogs with his own hands and kneel before their graves to seek forgiveness."

George immediately echoed, "Yes, they must be punished. They cannot leave just like that."

Like soldiers, military dogs have their special identification documents, too.

Chapter 1063 Must Be Punished

In fact, they are awarded badges and honorary ranks after having completed deeds of merit.

Army dogs are comrades-in-arms with soldiers, and one could even say that the two were like brothers.

Therefore, it was unthinkable for a soldier to actually do something as perverse as killing army dogs.

Since Nathan came across this incident, there was no way he would let off aholes like Dean Haze so easily.

Once Dean heard that they wanted him to not only be responsible for the wounded folks and dead army dogs but to also kneel before the dogs' graves, he lost his temper.

Philip's lips curled up slightly and he beamed, "Dean, since they don't respect us, we don't have to be too polite with them, either. Let's just take all of them down and bring Mr. William away first. When I get home, I'll let my father know, and he will come out to settle all the loose ends.”

Dean’s eyes lit up. He sneered at Nathan, Colin, George, and the rest of the men.

“All right, Mr. Lane, you’ve said it. I don’t care what his ranking is. I will still beat the crap out of him!”

Dean instructed his men, “You are all not allowed to use any weapons. Beat up every single one of these men until they fall to the ground!”

Dean’s men immediately dashed forward.

Nathan smiled a little and told Colin and George, “Since they are not using guns, neither will we. Let’s have a little fistfight with them!”

“Yes, Sir!”

Colin and George, together with the rest of the prison guards, followed suit by rolling up their sleeves and walking up to Dean and his gang.

The two groups quickly started a vicious fight.

Nathan stood aside and watched them calmly.

Philip snickered at Nathan, "They are soldiers, so there is no point for me to join their fight. However, you don't seem like a soldier!"

Nathan looked at Philip and asked coolly, "What do you mean?"

Philip sniggered with a half-smile, "This means that while I may not be able to take action on them, I can do so on you."

He then shouted loudly, "Come and take down this guy and break his legs, so that we can begin to avenge Mr. William."

And each of those men had their bones shattered into pieces; all suffered serious injuries.

Philip gasped.

At the same time, Colin had beat up Dean and his men so badly that all they heard was a continuous stream of screams and wails.

Philip's eyes nearly dropped out of their sockets at the sorry sight.

At this moment, Nathan appeared before him in a flash.

Philip stared at Nathan, who looked like a killing machine. He could barely suppress the fear that had ballooned inside him

Nathan said coldly, "Are you done with your bullsh*t? If so, kneel down!"

Nathan pressed one arm on Philip's shoulder.

Instantly, Philip felt as if a huge mountain had landed on his shoulders. His legs could no longer support him and with a thud, he fell onto his knees on the incredibly hard ground. His kneecaps were injured; it was so painful he gritted his teeth while tears involuntarily leaked out.

On the other side, Colin, George, and the rest of the guards had already taken down Dean and the rest of his men. They had also confiscated all of their opponents' weapons.

Colin asked Nathan, "Sir, what do we do with these guys?"

In the next second, Philip and Dean’s men were all thrown outside the prison grounds.

Apart from Nathan and his group, only Philip and Dean were left in the front yard of the prison.

Both men were kneeling on the ground in utter humiliation.

Nathan turned to George. “Where should we bury the two army dogs they’ve killed?”

George was extremely saddened by the deaths of the dogs because he had taken care of them for years and shared a close bond with both of them.

He pointed at a corner of the yard. “Both of them are registered army dogs, and there is no way I can bear to have them buried Dean's face took on a furious expression upon hearing Nathan's words.

Phillip also could not hold back his anger. He bellowed, "Nathan, how dare you order me to dig a grave for a dead dog and to kneel and repent before the grave! Do you believe I will kill your entire family—"

Nathan cut him off coldly. "You deserve to be slapped."

Colin snatched a rifle from a prison warden beside him and struck Phillip's face with the butt of the rifle.

A resounding thud rang out.

Colin had struck so hard that Philip's mouth bled profusely and a couple of his teeth fell out.

Phillip had never suffered so much in his entire life. One could only hear muffled cries of pain from him as he covered his mouth with his hand. Needless to say, he dared not utter another word now.

Dean hollered in shock, “How dare you hit Philip! You will be dead for sure...”

Without hesitation, Colin raised the gun in his hand again and struck Dean’s mouth with it!

Dean staggered back before falling onto the ground with his mouth full of blood. His tooth had cracked into two halves.

Nathan asked indifferently, “Do you have anything more to say?”

By now Phillip and Dean had collapsed in a heap on the floor, with their faces covered with blood. No more high-and-mighty, they looked like two injured dogs on the verge of death.

George Landon and the other prison wardens were thrilled by the sight before them. Aholes like Phillip and Dean deserve to be taught a lesson by the general.

Nathan turned to George. “Keep a close watch on them as they dig the grave, and make sure they kneel before it until the sun rises. Shoot them on the spot if they defy your orders, or if they attempt to escape!”

A mixture of shock and terror flashed across Phillip’s and Dean’s eyes.

“Yes, Sir!”

The soldiers beside George loaded their rifles and pointed them at Philip and Dean.

Left without a choice, Phillip and Dean got onto their knees painfully and started to dig the soil under the locust tree with their bare hands.

The soil was dry and hard.

As Dean used to be a soldier, he was accustomed to such harsh conditions. Thus, he could still bear the pain, although his hands and knuckles were already cracked and bleeding.

On the other hand, Nathan's anger dissipated slightly by the pathetic sight of Philip and Dean slogging their guts out. Finally satisfied, he turned to leave with Colin.

On the way home, Nathan ordered Colin, "Remember to ask Franklin Wilson to assign more soldiers to guard the military prison. We cannot afford to incur more accidents."

Tyler Webbs, the top fighter of the clan, reported, “Yes. I heard that Master and Dean injured a guard and killed military dogs in Mid Channing prison. Marcus turned incensed upon hearing Tyler’s words.

Chapter 1066 Not Hostess But A Beer Promoter

It was already past 10 pm when Nathan and Colin left Mid Channing.

Nathan felt a bit hungry, so he invited Colin for a meal along the nearby Supper Street.

Upon reaching Supper Street, they quickly decided on one of the eateries and ordered a ton of dishes.

Suddenly, a young woman dressed as a beer promoter approached them and asked shyly, “Sir, do you want to order some beer?”

She seemed to be around sixteen or seventeen years old—the age of a college student. Nathan found her rather conspicuous given her young age and that she was wearing a miniskirt.

He glanced at the attractive young woman before replying, “Give me two dozen beers!”

The young woman smiled sweetly upon hearing his reply and quickly proceeded to serve the beer to Nathan and Colin.

Chapter 1066 Not Hostess But A Beer Promoter

Seeing that she was rather unfamiliar with uncapping the beer bottle, Nathan asked, "I guess you are still studying? Why are you out selling beer?"

The young lady looked at Nathan warily upon hearing his question. But for some reason unbeknown to her, she felt she could trust him when she saw the determination in his eyes.

She replied softly, "I am a high school junior. My family is poor, so I work as a beer promoter after school to support my education and household expenses."

Poor children indeed have to manage household affairs at an early age!

Nathan nodded in approval and complimented her, "Not bad. You earn your own keep!"

The girl widened her eyes in surprise. She had kept her part-time beer promoter job a secret because no one would support her decision. In fact, Nathan was the only person who agreed with her.

Chapter 1066 Not Hostess But A Beer Promoter

Taking a second look at Nathan, she muttered softly, "Thank you for your understanding!"

At this moment, a few young chaps with brightly colored hair from the neighboring table called out to her, "Hey, babe! We want to order some beer! Come over here!"

The young lady hurried over and asked with a smile, "Hi, how many bottles of beer do you want to order?"

A blond-haired man smiled evilly, "How much is a bottle?"

"It's seven a bottle. You will enjoy a 30% discount if you order a dozen."

The blond-haired man took out notes totaling a thousand from his wallet and slammed it on the table. Peering lecherously at the young lady in her miniskirt, he smiled slyly. "Here's a thousand. I want a dozen beer. But there is a condition: You must sit down and drink with me."

The blond-haired man became infuriated and slammed the table. "Are you out to embarrass me?"

She panicked and apologized frantically, "I don't mean that. But I really don't drink, and I'm not a hostess..."

Suddenly, the man stood up and stretched his hand to stuff the money into her collar. He then suggested with a sinister smile, "It's okay if you don't drink; one can always learn. Furthermore, you can earn more money drinking with me than selling beer for an entire week. So, why don't you oblige? I love schoolgirls. If you serve me well I may even tip you a thousand more."

The man was furious.

Not only am I unsuccessful at hooking up with a mere beer promoter, but she has even splashed water at my face in front of my subordinates! This is downright embarrassing!

"Slut, you must have a death wish!"

He raised his right hand and was about to slap her hard across her face.

Flustered, he glared at Nathan. "How dare you stick your nose into my business! Are you looking to die?"

With that, he raised his leg to kick Nathan in his nether region.

But Nathan was faster. With a scoff, he kicked the man's leg first, and a loud cracking sound rang out.

The leg of the blond-haired man was broken.

The blond-haired man knew he was up against a tough opponent this time; hence, he immediately apologized to the young lady in a trembling voice while trying to ignore the excruciating pain coming from his broken leg. "Babe, I'm sorry."

The young lady raised her chin and replied graciously, "I accept your apology!"

Nathan and Colin returned to their seats and continued with their supper.

The young lady could not help asking, "Sir, my name is Faith Hill. May I know your name?"

Faith struggled with all her might as she shouted back, "I can earn my own keep! I don't need others to sponsor me!"

"Nonsense! Why are you so stubborn? Isn't it good to receive help from others? Didn't the man I introduced to you last time offer to pay your school fees every month? Why must you continue working instead of accepting others' help? Look at you in your miniskirt. Come home with me now!"

Faith cried while struggling to break free. “I don’t need your help! I hate it when others pity me! All my classmates are looking at me differently. And that man you mentioned wanted me to sleep with him in return for covering my school fees!”

What!

Sarah was dumbfounded.

Seeing the ruckus before him, Nathan could not help but offer his opinion, “Shouldn’t you consider her feelings? Sometimes, you can hurt others with your kind intentions. If you really want to help her, you can find her a more appropriate part-time job. What one needs is respect. After all, she can earn her own keep!”

Sarah glared at him and bellowed, “And who are you?”

“I am only a passerby. An ordinary customer of the eatery.”

Sarah scoffed, “Then our matters are none of your business!”

Nathan shook his head in resignation at the sight before him.

Colin smiled. "This woman is a shrew!"

An hour later, Nathan and Colin drove home after finishing their supper.

As they drove past a deserted alley, they saw a Beetle by the roadside.

A beautiful woman in office wear was surrounded by a few burly men.

That beautiful woman was Sarah Lee, the lady who had told Nathan off just now.

It turned out that Sarah had offended quite a lot of people with her forthright character and her news reports exposing the sordid underbelly of society.

Her enemies intercepted her on her way home.

A bearded man, who was the leader of the group harassing Sarah, flashed a sinister smile. "Thanks to you exposing my company's illegal practices, I was dealt with such a heavy fine that it bankrupted me overnight. My buddies and I shall settle the scores with you tonight."

Sarah was terrified to the core. "What do you want?"

The bearded man grinned sinisterly again, "To fk you!"

Sarah's face paled. At this moment, she noticed a BMW coming to a stop nearby. Two men came out of the car. They were Nathan and Colin, whom she met earlier.

Sarah cried for help desperately, "They want to bully me! Please help me!"

The bearded man and his accomplices glared at Nathan and Colin warily, fearing that they would step in to help Sarah.

Chapter 1068 This Woman Is A Shrew

Nathan lit a cigarette, took a puff at it, and smiled cheekily at Sarah, "I am only a passerby. This has nothing to do with me."

Disbelief crossed Sarah's beautiful face, and her eyes widened in shock upon hearing his words.

This guy is so petty!

Upon hearing Nathan's claim that he was merely a passerby, the bearded man and his gang exchanged glances before breaking out into smug grins.

The bearded man was pleased with Nathan. "I'm glad you know your limits and made the right choice to not stick your nose into my business."

He turned to the rest of his gang and ordered, "Bring this slut into the car. She caused us a loss of over ten million. We shall have our fun with her until she dies!"

Lecherous grins appeared on the faces of those men. They closed in on Sarah and were about to carry her into the car amidst her terrified screams when Nathan ordered, "Enough!"

The bearded man and his gang glared at Nathan in shock, "What are you trying to do?"

Nathan did not bother to spare a glance at the thugs but smiled cheekily at Sarah instead, "I can help you to get rid of them, but on one condition."

Chapter 1069 How Do You Want Me To Repay You

Sarah put on a troubled look. What does he want from me? Is it going to be an outrageous demand?

Sarah knew she could not reject his request given her current predicament, so she had no choice but to reply, "Fine. I promise you. Help me get rid of them now!"

The bearded man was fuming mad, "How dare you be so nosey! Do you believe I will kill you?"

But Nathan only smiled in return. "Colin!"

"Yes!"

Colin, with his burly build, strode towards the bearded man and his gang. The unsavory gang exchanged glances with each other, after which they took out their knives and inched towards Colin with malicious smiles on their faces. "Prepare to die, you dumb brute!"

Before the bearded man and his gang could react, Colin had already knocked them flat onto the ground. Their bones could be heard cracking amid their agonizing groans.

Astonished, Sarah glanced at Nathan, who was smoking leisurely, before shifting her gaze onto the tall and strong Colin.

Sarah called the police immediately, who arrived quickly and locked the bearded man and his gang up.

She took the opportunity to ask Nathan in the presence of the policemen, "Speak. What is your condition? How do you want me to repay you?"

The policemen did not know Nathan; they only recognized Sarah as the beautiful reporter from the local TV station. Hence, they looked at Nathan with envy and curiosity. What will he request? Will he ask her out for dinner or to catch a movie? Or maybe he will push his luck and ask her to be his girlfriend for one day!

Actually, Sarah was a bundle of nerves because she was worried that Nathan might make outrageous demands of her. But she was hoping that Nathan would not dare to push her limits before the policemen.

“What do I want from you?”

Nathan smiled mischievously and looked around him. He spotted a signboard lying on the roadside with the words Be a civilized citizen and mind your language inscribed on it.

His eyes lit up at the sight of it. He picked it up and passed it to Sarah.

“My request is very simple. You shall have this signboard on you for the next 24 hours.”

What?

The policemen were flabbergasted.

Sarah was stunned.

Colin bowed his head and tried to stifle a laugh. The general must still be angry with Sarah for scolding him just now. He is making a fool out of her on purpose to punish her!

Sarah also knew that Nathan was punishing her for scolding him just now.

A flush crept up her neck and into her face, and at this moment, she hated him to the core.

Everyone had doted on her since young because of her good looks. Growing up, all the men she met during her school years and the course of her career had fought to win her heart. Yet, Nathan was out to embarrass her on purpose!

Nathan smiled sweetly at Sarah, whose face had gone scarlet. "Are you unwilling to fulfill your promise? Forget it, then. Anyway, I have expected you to break your promise."

Sarah's face darkened upon hearing Nathan's words.

Expect me to break my promise? What does he mean by that? Am I one to go back on my word?

She snatched the signboard from him and replied angrily, "Fine. I will wear this signboard for 24 hours. Take it as my apology for scolding you earlier. But don't be too smug. You are only a rich spoilt brat with a bodyguard. I will make you suffer if I find any evidence of your wrongdoings in the future!"

With that, she took the signboard and drove off in a huff.

Nathan and Colin exchanged grins before bidding farewell to the policemen and left.

Sarah slammed the signboard onto the table angrily the moment she reached home. This guy is too much!

The next day, she took leave from work and stayed at home for the entire day to look up Nathan's identity.

Although she was well-connected, she could not gather much information about Nathan.

The Secret Service would comb through the internet for information about Nathan regularly and delete it accordingly. Thus, there was not much information about Nathan online.

Thus, investigating for an entire day, Sarah could only find out that Nathan was a retired soldier and that he was the husband of Penny Smith, the Business Goddess in Channing. He was unemployed and lived with Penny in her house. In short, he was a man who lived off his wife's money.

Sarah and Penny were primary schoolmates, and she had even interviewed the latter recently.

Although they were not close friends, Sarah felt indignant on Penny's behalf after realizing that Nathan was her husband and was financially dependent on her.

"So Nathan is the drunkard who slept with Penny years ago. This man has caused her so much trouble, and now he has the cheek to reconcile with her and even stay in her house. He is so shameless indeed!"

That afternoon, she set off to look for Penny at her Cross Group office.

Penny was surprised to learn of Sarah's visit and ordered her secretary to fetch her a glass of tea. Smiling, Penny said, "Hello, Ms. Reporter, what made you come here so suddenly?"

Sarah sat down and went straight to the point immediately. "Penny, is your husband, Nathan, the drunkard who caused you so much trouble back then?"

Penny was stunned for a moment before she replied with a smile, “That was ages ago. Actually, he is a good person, but fate played tricks on us.”

Sarah could not help but rebuke her. “He is a scumbag! He bullied you in the past and only returned after finding out that you have made it big. Isn’t he mooching off you now? Penny, you are so perfect. Why don’t you leave this scumbag and divorce him?”

Penny’s face darkened upon hearing Sarah’s words; she was about to defend Nathan when the door opened.

Nathan commented coldly as he entered Penny’s office, “Are you crazy? Don’t you know that one can destroy everything but marriage? And where is your signboard?”

“Here!”

Sarah took out the signboard that said Be a civilized citizen and mind your language from her bag meekly.

Nathan scoffed, “Wear the signboard properly and observe what was written on it. Don't talk rubbish and be a civilized citizen!"

Sarah turned infuriated, "You!"

"Do you have other matters? If not, I want to speak to my wife."

Nathan was chasing her out!

Sarah glared at Nathan and left in a huff after bidding Penny farewell.

Penny asked curiously, "Nathan, do you know her?"

Nathan then truthfully revealed what had happened between them last night.

Penny was both amused and displeased with him. "Why must you make a fool out of her? No wonder she hates you."

"I am only teaching her a lesson by asking her to be a civilized citizen and mind her words."

...

After leaving the Cross Group, Sarah was about to get into her car when she received a call from her friend.

“Hi Babe, I have important news for you. It has something to do with Nathan, the guy you are investigating.”

Sarah’s interest was piqued. “What is it?”

Her friend reported excitedly, “Nathan has offended the Saber clan—head of the eight most revered families in our country. The master of the clan, Marcus Lane, has gathered his most skillful fighters in Channing to settle scores with Nathan.”

Sarah’s eyes lit up at the news, and she exclaimed enthusiastically, “I must investigate the feud between Nathan and the clan. Maybe I will dig out some shocking news and expose the murky underbelly of society. That is my forte!”

Sarah was carried away by her enthusiasm. But she could never imagine
