Madam Winters's Fight For Her Children Chapter 1122

Chapter 1122 "At that time, everyone was in shock. Daddy was furious, and everyone else blamed themselves for it..."

Ninian's voice quivered as she recalled her dark past.

Her usually lit-up bright eyes were now welling up with tears and looked dull.

"George personally dealt with that man. He even... turned violent..."

"At that time, George was upset. Everyone... was also upset..."

"Okay, Ninian. Enough!" Raina said out loud. She could not bear it anymore. "It's all in the past now..."

"I'd never once seen George work so hard. He blamed himself for the incident..." Ninian was deep into her memories. The shackles of trauma that kept her from moving on were not the incident itself, but instead, it was the guilt the family felt from the incident.

Her face was pale and clenched her fingers as she said, "George and Alden barely slept, Mommy and Melody cried secretly, and Harold, the most cheerful person I know, did not smile for half a year..."

"Grapie..." Harold looked at her pale face, her eyes couldn't help but had a sour feeling in her heart.

‘So, that’s the real reason why my poor sister can’t move on...’

Harold wanted to say something, but before he could, Raina stood up and hugged Ninian. She gently stroked her soft hair and said, “Ninian, it’s all over now, and everyone is fine now. There’s no need to be afraid or guilty about it.”

Harold felt upset and had a tightness in his throat. He faked a charming smile, held Ninian’s hand, blinked his eyes, and said jokingly, “I have no idea you felt so guilty about this matter. Looks like I need to give you a good squeeze.”

Ninian gradually calmed down and focused on Harold and Raina when she saw Harold’s cheerful smile and Raina’s gentle and firm reassurance.

“Hal...” She pursed her lips. She had an aggrieved expression on her delicate face. “I’m sorry, I made you worry.”

“Silly girl, we’re a family. There’s no need to say such things. We’re here to support you!” Harold said as he held her hands gently. It was as if he was trying to radiate courage and strength to her to fight through the shadow of her past. Raina said tenderly, “Ninian, you’re a good girl. They are happy to have you as their sister.”

“Re– Really?” Ninian could not help but feel shy and blushed when she saw Raina looking at her with her gentle and magnanimous gaze. ‘What, What am I doing?!

‘I’m supposed to help Raina and George resolve their conflict. How did I end up crying my eyes out?!’

She snuggled her face into Raina’s embrace. She was too embarrassed to look up as she only revealed her red ears.

Raina and Harold looked at each other and laughed helplessly.

The atmosphere of the cafe finally became warm and harmonious at that moment

"Alright, Grapie. Let's get back to business," Harold changed the topic, so she would not be left feeling awkward.

"Oh, yes." Ninian raised her head and smiled sheepishly. Her eyes lit up. "I'm sorry, Raina. It's embarrassing to have you watch me act like this."

"No worries." Raina smiled and shook her head as she returned to her seat.

"Raina, we've now told you why George lost contact with you. Are there any other misunderstandings between the two of you?" Harold did not beat around the bush and spoke pointedly.

Ninian blinked as she earnestly looked at Raina.

When Raina showed how serious Ninian and Harold were, she could no longer put on a cold expression. She sighed helplessly and laughed, feeling amused.

"What Ninian told me just now only lets me know that George didn't abandon me to be the heir of the company. But this doesn't change the fact that he won't communicate and share certain things with me.

"He either doesn't trust me or he doesn't find me that important. Moreover, he never lets me know beforehand that he'll be disappearing for quite some time, nor does he contact me when he does get back.

"I know now that he was in a tough position at that time. But was he truly so busy to the point where he couldn't even give me a text?" Raina smiled bitterly and said, "I've never blamed him for not showing up at the right time to help me, but I'm just wondering if he truly cared about me."

"Raina ..." Ninian could not help but speak up, "George actually cares about you, a lot!" "Is that so? Well, perhaps. But what's the use of saying this?" She shook her head, feeling anguished. "Back then, I chased after him with all I had, and stuck with him for a long time. Even so, he remained indifferent. You know, I was very insecure at that time, and I was afraid that he would abandon me at any time. He doesn't love me at all." "Geo—"

Raina raised her hand and gestured to Ninian, who was desperately trying to explain. She continued, "Maybe he's not used to me being away from him, maybe he's not convinced by my words, or maybe he's been feeling guilty when he noticed how miserable I became ever since he disappeared. In short, there are countless reasons why he still misses me and can't move on from this relationship."

"I personally feel the latter is the most likely. After all, he has always been so sensible and responsible. He must have agreed to get together with me when he took my first kiss. Before this, when I courted him for the longest of times, he had acted indifferently."

“Even so, he wasn’t able to deceive himself after we got together. He doesn’t love me, and that’s the truth. Anyone and anything else comes before me. His studies, his job, his family, and even his hobbies... are all more important than me.

“You know, he’s not a good liar. I took the initiative to kiss him for the first time when he was asleep.” Raina chuckled. She did not hide the sadness and bitterness in her gaze. “Later on, I found out that he had been awake at that time. Because of that kiss, he avoided me for three days.”

“When we finally met again, I had to be cautious. I was afraid that I’d offend him further, and that he’ll hate me and try to avoid me again. Then, he’d say goodbye for real.

“After what happened to my father and my brother, I searched for him everywhere, only to find out that I knew very little about him. I didn’t even know his real identity or where he lived. Just like our other mutual friends, I could only wait for him to reach out to me. I wasn’t able to reach out to him on my own. When he decided to shut himself out from my world, he turned into a ghost. .

“On my most helpless and desperate night, I leaned against the walls of the hospital corridor, unable to even cry. Behind that wall, my father had stopped breathing, and the doctors were trying to resuscitate my brother. I clutched my phone, but there was no one that I could ask for help...”

Tears streamed down her face, but she quickly wiped them away, showing no trace of tears.

She smiled and mocked herself, “That half a month was like a living hell to me. Do you know what made me make up my mind to give up on this relationship?”
