Madam Winters's Fight For Her Children Chapter 1136

Chapter 1136 While Ninian was in a daze, Everett suddenly took a step back.

He pulled down his cap and whispered, "Be careful".

As he was about to leave, Ninian's agile hand grabbed his arm. He was shocked, and when he turned back, their eyes met.

"Um... Sorry..." She recalled that he hated coming in contact with other people.

She felt awkward. However, Everett was not looking at her hand. Instead, he was looking behind her vigilantly.

She turned back and looked, only to see a few figures emerging from the shadows.

"Damn it!" Ninian exclaimed.

'Those are my family's bodyguards!

'No wonder Hal and Al let me out. They've secretly sent their men to follow me!'

Everett, who had obviously noticed their presence, pulled his hand away, ready to leave. He did not plan to expose his identity to the Winters family just yet.

But just as he pulled his hand back, Ninian swiftly grasped it.

“Follow me!”

She clutched his hand tightly as she led him into a small alley.

Everett looked at her delicate and bright face from the side, feeling confused and bewildered for a moment. He acted before he could process what was going on. He was stunned, but he was already running with her.

The streetlights were dim, and they cast shadows over her face as they ran past them. Her eyes lit up like a star.

His mind was blank and all he could see was Ninian, who was running in front of him.

He could neither see nor hear anything else.

The girl that he longed for was running with him across the crowd, escaping from their pursuers in a long street under the stars in a foreign country. He only had one thought.

‘I hope the street will be longer.

‘Preferably, one without an end.

‘If only we can keep running, I can finally be free from my shackles and just focus on her breathing.

After running for a long time, Ninian pulled Everett under a shade as they hid behind a big tree. “The— They didn’t catch up, did they?” Ninian was panting. “Damn it, I’m so tired...”

The glistening sweat on her forehead and her lit-up eyes made her look like a star.

Everett's heart softened, and he slowed down his breathing. "Don't worry, they didn't."

"You're pretty athletic. We've run for so long, but you don't even need to catch your breath." Ninian was dog-tired. She fanned herself with her hands.

When she calmed down, she realized what she had just done.

"I'm... I'm so sorry." She instantly became awkward and tried to explain to him, "Those people just now were..." "Calm down," he said in a low voice. He pushed back her long hair that was stuck to her cheek and said gently, "I know."

She was stunned.

She blinked her eyes, not knowing how to react. 'Since when did the indifferent boy that I know become so gentle?'

'But now that I think of it, he acted indifferent to other people only. But when it comes to me... he seems to act gentler.'

Her heart started pounding uncontrollably as her face blushed bright red.

'Wh-What am I thinking?'

'Why would I think he treats me differently?'

She did not dare to look at him. She turned, feeling flustered, as she continued to fan herself. "It's so... so hot"

As she was about to stand up to leave that cramped space, a strong hand grabbed her.

“Watch out!”

“Huh?”

Ninian slipped and fell forward, falling onto Everett. The two fell down together, and she immediately closed her eyes in fright.

She expected to feel pain, but instead, she felt a warm body embracing her.

“Ev– Ah!”

As she was about to speak, Everett pressed her head against his neck.

He then said in a low voice, “Wait, they’re out there.”

Ninian stayed still.

She was blushing so hard that her face turned bright red.

‘Does he know how dubious they both look right now?’

She pressed her lips against his neck, feeling the cold skin.

She felt his pulse thumping next to her, making her heart beat rapidly.

Everett's body tensed up and became vigilant.

Even so, Ninian knew that though he looked indifferent on the outside, his warm breath and beating heart were reassuring

They heard cluttered footsteps and voices of people talking from the busy street a distance from them.

And here they were, on top of each other, panting, surrounded by green trees and grass.

Their breaths gradually became ambiguous.

Ninian could feel Everett was once again focused on her. His touch was warm, as he did not dare to exert any more force on the hand he was using to press her head against his neck.

The two remained still, listening to the noises around them as they felt their surroundings getting warmer. "Ni—" Everett's voice was hoarse and restrained. "Ninian ... get up."

Ninian refused to move.

She was also a willful person. And at that moment, she did not want to get up.

His chest was warm, giving her a sense of security, making her reluctant to leave him.

'I just want to cling onto him for the rest of her life.'

Up until this point, she finally realized the kind of affection she had for Everett.

'I finally realized why I've been keeping an eye on him so closely, why I felt happy whenever he approached me, why I felt sad whenever he was away, and why I had the urge to kiss him when I saw him earlier.

'Turns out, I had fallen for him unknowingly.

And he didn't reject me. Otherwise, why would he show up from miles away to save me? "Everett..."
Ninian said,

She leaned in and pressed her lips against the side of his neck and kissed it.

Everett did not dare to move. He held his breath and his heart was pounding rapidly.

She raised her head and looked at him.

The dim streetlamp cast shadows on his face, making it hard for her to see his expression.

But she could feel the tension from his fiery gaze, which was focused on her.

Her heart was pounding violently as she felt flustered. "Everett..." She looked into his eyes and said, "I like you

His pupils dilated.

In an instant, the world fell silent.

His emotions struggled to break free of the shackles and seals he had painstakingly placed around them. They shattered like glass at that moment. He could feel the other half of him; the horrifying, paranoid side of him, trying to break free and take over his body.

He wanted to embrace her in his arms and swallow her whole.

His pupil constricted as he tried to fight an inner battle.

Yet, Ninian looked at him tenderly and said, "You don't need to be accountable for my feelings. It's mine alone. I won't bother you with it. I'll..."

Before she could finish her sentence, he lowered his gaze and looked at her.

He wrapped his arms around her waist and got on top of her. While Ninian was still in shock, he kissed her passionately.
