My Baby's Daddy Chapter 1407

Rita caught it easily. Ruka smiled. "I wish you happiness, Rita."

Rita stole a glance at Elijah. And perhaps it's already right here.

And then it was time to raise toasts. Scarlet and Walter represented their parents and dealt with the guests. Ren and Elijah went with them. Ruka just got pregnant so she couldn't drink or walk around, hence she and Rita went to the common room.

"Ruka, is Elijah taken?" Rita asked shyly.

"He's single. Ren said he's too busy to even have a girlfriend." Ruka smiled. She knew Rita was interested in Elijah, and she was more than happy to match them up.

"Really?" Rita's eyes shone.

"Rita, Elijah's a nice guy. You can consider him."

"B-But will he date me?" Rita didn't have high hopes. She didn't know him well, so she thought her charms weren't enough to attract him.

"Rita, you're beautiful. Trust me. He'll love you," Ruka encouraged her.

At this moment, Elijah and Ren came back from a round of drinking. Elijah's face was a little red. Since Ren wasn't drinking, he had to do the job himself.

It was a happy day, so he did it gladly.

The three couples took up one table. They were all looking really great, and everyone was attracted to them. It wasn't every day that three high-profile couples showed up in the same place.

The banquet wrapped up at eight. There was no entertainment, nor was there any need for it. Ren was already an important enough figure without anyone hyping him out. The people with kids were already going home to see their children.

Rita was about to leave, but then someone said, "Ms. Sommerfield, I had a bit too much to drink. Can you give me a ride?"

It was Elijah. He had been keeping up with Rita. The liquid courage from the alcohol he had gave him the push he needed to tell Rita what he thought.

"Sure, no problem." Rita was excited that she could help.

She drove all the way to Elijah's house. Rita's driving was a bit wild because of how excited she was. The moment they got to Elijah's house, he got out of the car and puked into the grass.

Rita blamed herself for this, and she also felt sympathetic toward him. While they were on their way here, Elijah told her he was living all by himself. His parents weren't around. "Why don't stay for the night, Mr. Jackman? I can help you," she asked.

"You'd do that for me?" Elijah felt his stomach churning from how much he puked. He needed someone to care for him.

"Of course. As long as you want me—"

"Of course I'd want you! I'm honored you'd stay just for me," he answered right away.

Rita smiled. "Okay. I'll be taking care of you then."

Rita called Ruka one week later. Ruka had just woken up from a nap. Rita sheepishly told her about the news.

She was dating Elijah. Ruka was delighted to hear that "Elijah is a really reliable and responsible guy. I'm happy for you, Rita," she congratulated.

Angela gave birth to her girl about a month later, and Richard was finally a father. The Meyers and Lloyds were delighted to finally welcome their first grandchild.

Richard was usually a calm and collected man at work, but he scrambled to hold his daughter when the nurse handed the baby to him. He carefully held the baby and looked at her. She was sleeping after crying so much. His heart melted.

"How's my wife doing?"

“She’s taking a break. You’re not allowed to see her at the moment.” The nurse told him what Angela said.

Richard was amused. He did want to go inside, but since Angela made that order, he waited until she was done taking a break.

Angela felt a weight being lifted off her shoulders after giving birth. It felt like she just finished her duty. Daphne was beside her, crying. Her heart went out for Angela, and Angela had to console her instead.

“Don’t cry, Mom. I’m not crying, and I’m the one who gave birth.”

“It must have been painful for you.” Daphne was a successful businesswoman, and she really loved her daughter. She’d do anything if it meant her daughter wouldn’t get hurt.

A smile curled Angela’s lips. Back in the operating room, she swore she would never get pregnant again, but when she saw her daughter coming to this world safe and sound, crying without a care in the world, she forgot all the pain she had suffered. All she felt was contentment.

It was like she just did the most important thing in her life

She had enough rest from the one month of confinement. The whole family was willing to take care of the baby, so she had a wonderful time. Angela came back looking healthy and glistening.

At a quiet coffee shop in a mall, a woman with a resumé in her hands was sitting at a table. She closed her eyes in frustration and anger. She just got refused by another company.

She had been job hunting for two months, but still no luck. This woman was Victoria. Ever since she was fired from the Translation Department, she had been waiting for news of Ren's failure to get reelected. Reality didn't go as she wished, of course. Now he and Ruka were in a different world than she was.

She had used all her connections to get into the Translation Department and spent all her time on work. Eventually she made it to department head, but now her father was taken down and she too was fired. Ever since then, she could only job hunt at private companies. Falling from heaven hurt her a lot.

She scoffed at most job offers, but she couldn't provide the recruiters with her past experience, so all she got were offers for regular positions. It wasn't what she wanted.

Eventually she broke down, and she regretted what she did. Why did I stake my future on a man I might not even get to have in the end?

It was too late for regrets, though. She played all her cards, and it resulted in a mess.

After she was booted out of upper society, nobody would tell her any news about Ren and Ruka, even when she tried to ask. All she knew was that they got married.

He loves her so much. They're gonna be really happy. He didn't date anyone until he was thirty-three years old. All just for her. His love for her runs deep.

No matter how much she wanted to deny it, the peak of her life was gone, and it would never return. Her strongest backer had fallen.

The summer sun shone brightly on a landmark hotel in the city center. It gleamed a brilliant golden, shining on the city.

A woman in a red dress stood before president suite number 8808 with a card in her hand. The woman took a deep breath and closed her eyes in an attempt to hold her fury back. Finally, she unlocked the door.

The key card reader let out a beep, and she kicked the door open. Before the people inside could react, she whipped her phone out and recorded the messy room, including the couple on the bed, who were sleeping in each other's embrace.

The woman on the bed let out a scream. The man opened his eyes and pulled the woman into his arms. He glared at the woman who was taking a video. "What are you doing, Queenie? Stop recording!"

"My fiance and my sister just betrayed me. Tell me, why shouldn't I take proof of your betrayal, scum? This isn't the only thing I'll do. I'm going to post it online too."

"Are you mad, Queenie? Leslie and I are made for each other! You're the third wheel here!" The woman in the man's arms raised her head. The light shone on her, and surprisingly, she looked just like the woman in red.

"Bonnie's right, Queenie. She's the one I love, not you."

Queenie peered at the man. They got engaged a year ago, but now he was holding her twin sister in his arms, protecting her like she was his greatest treasure.
