My Baby's Daddy Chapter 1487

"I've compromised and allowed you to have whatever you want for long enough.

is yours and From now onward, I'm not giving in to you any longer. What's yours what's mine is mine. Don't even think about touching anything of mine, let alone taking it away from me." Queenie stared at Bonnie with a pair of steely eyes.

Bonnie bit her lip and sneered, "Isn't it just a few pairs of lousy earrings? What makes you think I want them anyway?" She stormed up the stairs.

Queenie followed her to the third floor and heard Bonnie flinging the door open before heading to her jewelry case. She took out four pairs of earrings and threw them onto the couch. "Here! You can have them back."

Furious, Queenie held her hand out. "Pick them up and hand them to me."

Bonnie froze for a second before snorting. "As if I'd do that. The earrings are right there. You can take them yourself!"

Queenie's eyes flashed coldly. "Since you keep saying that I'm your older sister, I shall do my job as your older sister and teach you some manners. From now on, this house isn't the place where you can play your silly mind games and act like a spoiled princess."

However, Bonnie seemed insistent on going against Queenie. “You? Teach me manners? What a joke. What makes you think you-”

Queenie grabbed Bonnie by the wrist and shoved her to the ground. As someone who took Taekwondo lessons before, it was easy enough for her to pin Bonnie to the floor by resting her knee against Bonnie’s neck. She pressed Bonnie’s arms against the floor and warned icily, “Bonnie Silverstein, you better not mess with me, or else, I don’t mind running you out of the house and forcing you to go back to your adoptive parents’ house.”

“Why, you... Queenie Silverstein, I’m telling Mom and Dad about this! I’m going to tell them that you don’t want me around and that you hate me because I came back!” Bonnie shrieked in pain as she tried to push Queenie off.

However, Queenie didn’t budge as she held Bonnie down with her knee still. “If want others to like you and don’t want others to hate you, then you should first learn how to behave like a decent human being!”

The force that Queenie exerted nearly choked Bonnie. Her face and neck turned red as she screamed, “I can’t breathe! Let go of me!”

Just then, Courtney came upstairs to bring the girls some fruits, and she jumped in fright when she saw the two of them fighting.

“You shouldn’t be doing this, Miss Queenie!” Courtney exclaimed anxiously.

“Stay out of this, Mrs. Lowman. Some people deserve to be taught a lesson,” Queenie said to Courtney.

Courtney hurried back downstairs. Meanwhile, Bonnie was in so much agony her face had gone pale. “I’m going to die, Queenie.”

Queenie let go at last, and Bonnie gasped for air as the flames of resentment in her eyes burned brighter. “Queenie, I’ll remember this. From now on, only one of us will get to stay in this house. Just wait and see. Let’s see who’ll be the first to leave this family.”

In all honesty, Queenie was mourning the fact that she was hearing this from Bonnie. She longed to have a loving relationship with her sister and she didn’t want a sister who went against her at every turn. How she wished that the family could just live in harmony.

However, everything that Bonnie had done so far made Queenie too furious. All Bonnie did was either complain about her to their parents or slander her and pretend to be pitiful to gain their sympathy. Bonnie used every means possible to torment Queenie. That night, Bonnie cried her eyes dry and complained to Brandon and Maggie about how Queenie bullied her in the afternoon.

“Dad, you had no idea how frightened I was when she pressed down on my neck with her knee. I nearly suffocated!”

“Do you have proof? Did anyone see this?” Queenie calmly ate her food. “Please prepare some evidence before making wild accusations about me.”

Bonnie froze in shock. It was her first time seeing Queenie stooping to trickery. She pointed at someone and said, "She saw it! She can be my witness."

Courtney had just brought the fruit salad to the table. She stiffened as Bonnie commanded her to come over. "Come here! You're my witness. You saw Queenie kneeling on my neck this afternoon, right?"

"I didn't see anything like that, Miss Bonnie." Courtney shook her head.

Bonnie's face contorted in fury as she glowered at Courtney. The look in her eyes said, I see. I won't be forgetting this.

However, Queenie didn't want to drag Courtney into this, so she turned to her parents and said, "Mom, Dad, I did say a few words to Bonnie this afternoon. She took my earrings so I wanted to tell her that taking someone else's belongings without asking is the same as stealing. I'm just trying to help her become a decent human being."

Brandon nodded in agreement once he heard that and turned to Bonnie. "Bonnie, Queenie did the right thing this time. In the future, you should ask your sister first before you take any of her belongings."

Bonnie turned red. She could tell that Queenie had the upper hand this time, so her only choice was to pout and mutter aggrievedly, "Yes, Dad."

Maggie tried to console her. "Didn't I give you a credit card? You can just buy whatever you need."

Bonnie bit her lip. "I just didn't want to spend money unnecessarily, Mom."

“But just this afternoon, you came home with two bags of clothes. I’m guessing that they cost at least 10 thousand!” Queenie exposed her lie without missing a beat.

Bonnie glared at her darkly. “Queenie, Dad approved my purchases.”

“That’s enough. Let’s just have dinner,” Brandon said.

Bonnie glanced at Courtney before secretly tugging a strand of hair off and surreptitiously adding it to the soup beside her.

“Oh my goodness! What’s this? Is it a strand of hair?” A few moments later, just as Bonnie started drinking her soup, she purposely spooned the hair out of her bowl and exclaimed, “Mom, Dad, I feel so disgusted! I nearly ate a strand of hair!”

Queenie glanced over and Bonnie immediately wrapped the hair up in a piece of tissue before tossing it onto the table. “I’m not drinking this soup anymore. Mom, Dad, you guys shouldn’t drink it either. It’s revolting!”

Courtney grew frantic as she quickly defended herself. “Mr. and Mrs. Silverstein, I always wear a hat whenever I prepare the food.”

“Are you trying to imply that it was my hair?” Bonnie raged.

Queenie took one look at Bonnie’s chestnut-colored hair before studying the strand of hair that was thrown onto the table. She got up and came over to pick up the tissue with the hair. She didn’t mind getting her hands dirty as she gave the strand of hair a closer look. "This is your own hair. Don't try to make up false accusations about Mrs. Lowman."

Bonnie turned scarlet once more. She didn't think that Queenie would come over and continue to expose her. "You're just harboring resentment that Mrs. Lowman didn't act as your witness just now. You wanted to use your own hair to set her up. You shouldn't have such a malevolent streak, Bonnie."

Courtney gave Queenie a look of gratitude. Although she knew that Bonnie was setting her up on purpose, she was just a member of the household staff and couldn't defend herself.

Maggie and Brandon exchanged looks before sighing to themselves. They thought that Bonnie was just a little spoiled, but from the looks of it now, she was beginning to show an unscrupulous side to her as well.

"I'm full," Bonnie announced. She set down her cutlery and walked off, not forgetting to act as if she were completely broken-hearted.

That night, Maggie went to Bonnie's room to comfort her. Bonnie threw herself into Maggie's arms and moaned about being hated by everyone. She also talked about how much she suffered while growing up with adopted parents.

Maggie's heart softened after all that. Even though Bonnie had made a mistake tonight, Maggie didn't think much of it anymore.

It was Friday morning.

Leslie came to the house with a bouquet of red roses, but Bonnie hid in her room and refused to see him. It was Brandon who welcomed him into the house as the Silversteins and the Paynes had a good relationship with each other.

“Mr. Silverstein, my father and I discussed everything last night. I will break off the engagement with Queenie and get engaged to Bonnie right after,” Leslie announced expectantly.

“Good. That’s what we want as well.” Brandon nodded. He was beginning to realize that he and his wife couldn’t control how Bonnie behaved, so he wanted to help her get a good marriage as soon as possible.

Leslie couldn’t stop himself from heading upstairs to see Bonnie. He missed her too much.

The door to Bonnie’s room remained shut even though Leslie kept knocking for ages. It was Queenie who was disturbed by the incessant noise. She opened her door and looked at Leslie who was standing in front of the opposite room. “She doesn’t want to see you, so don’t bother knocking anymore.”

“What’s going on with Bonnie?” Leslie was at a loss. It was as if Bonnie had suddenly changed into a whole new person overnight. She didn’t care about him anymore and didn’t even want to see him.

Queenie was probably the only one who knew the reason why. Bonnie’s favorite pastime was to steal anything that Queenie wanted. If Queenie didn’t want it anymore, then Bonnie lost interest in it too. It was the same each time, regardless of whether it was an item or a man.

Right now, Bonnie was fantasizing about seducing Nigel!

Just then, Bonnie opened her door. She stood at the door all dolled up, and when she spotted Leslie, she felt a little turned off. "I told you not to come to my house ever again, so why did you still come?"
