

Reborn Through Fire By Kazuya Higan

Chapter 711 – 713

Chapter 711 Hate Me to Death

Gilbert stood up quickly and looked at Kisa nervously.

As Kisa came out, so did the two jailers.

There was still a look of fear on the jailers' faces. They handed each other as support and looked at Gilbert with evasive eyes as if it was really him who threatened them back then.

Gilbert's heart was filled with anger for a long time.

Seeing this, he walked toward the jailers immediately. He was full of fierceness, and his face was gloomy. The jailers screamed in terror.

Kisa stopped him. She turned her head to the two jailers and said calmly, "Head home."

Although the two jailers were full of fear, there was still a bit of guilt in the fear.

"M—Ms. Becker, we were possessed and did such insane back then. We're suffering the retribution now. Our days wear on like years in this remote and impoverished place. I hope Ms. Becker will stop hating us and hurting our children."

"Yes. Besides, we have told you everything we know. I hope you won't disturb our life in the future. Oh! We really regret it. We have lived in fear every day for these years. We're in pain too. Boo hoo..."

Kisa's face was expressionless. She said indifferently, "I give you a chance to leave, but you don't go. Are you waiting for me to change my mind?"

The two jailers were scared to say anything else after hearing this. They handed each other as support and walked toward a tile house in the east of the village immediately.

Gilbert was anxious. He looked at Kisa hastily, "What did they say about the truth back then?"

Kisa looked at him calmly, "Are you worried?"

"Of course! Gosh! I'm afraid that they'll frame me. Besides, you're heartless. You'll definitely hate me to death again if they say I started the fire."

Gilbert was in a panic now. He had no idea what the jailers told Kisa, and he felt unease while seeing her face was abnormally calm.

Kisa put her hand in the pocket of the down jacket. She looked in the direction where the jailers left and murmured, "Yes. You keep telling me you're innocent along the way. So I'd thought I'd never forgive you the rest of my life if you lied to me."

An inexplicable chill soared on Gilbert. He grabbed her hand anxiously, "I didn't lie to you. What did those jailers tell you?"

Only then did Kisa shift her gaze to his face. She whispered while looking at his frowning, "The jailers said a woman asked them to say the passage outside the door on purpose. It had nothing to do with you. They also said it was a strict order from the warden to lock me in the cell. They were unsure who had begun the fire. They only said a woman stayed in the warden's office for a long time on the day of the fire. The jailers faintly heard they were talking about accidents and fires."

“Well...” Gilbert’s brows were still furrowed. He asked in a tense voice, “What do you think?”

“I think maybe there’s nothing to do with you for the fire. There’s no point for them to say the passage purposely if you did it. Now that I think about it, they want to mislead me deliberately that you began the fire and make me hate you.”

Gilbert looked at her fixedly, “Is that what you’re thinking?”

“Although I have always hated you, I want to find out the truth too. So I won’t trust anyone blindly.”

Gilbert seemed relieved and relaxed his frowning brows a bit. He asked in a deep voice, “Who is the woman they said? Sharon?”

Kisa shook her head.

“I showed them the photo of Sharon. They were certain that it wasn’t the woman in the photo.”

Kisa was also full of doubts when mentioning this.

‘I couldn’t think of anyone else who had the motive to start that fire back then except Sharon. Another question is why the two jailers were scared of Gilbert.’

These doubtful points made Kisa feel unease, and this matter was not over yet.

Suddenly, Gilbert took her into his arms when she was thinking about it. He hugged her tightly. There was no irritation or gloom in his tone but joy and excitement, “Everything is fine as long as you believe that fire has nothing to do with me. I’ll figure out who set the fire back then.”

Gilbert’s voice became cold abruptly with a malignant scowl as he spoke, “I’ll make the murderer pay a terrible price and revenge for you and our child.”

Speaking of the child, Kisa was reminded of the jailers' words. They had said, "You... have more than a child, right?"

"I can't remember clearly. The situation was messy at that time. I remember there was a sound of exclamation in the infirmary after you got in. They seemed to be talking about children, a live or something.

"But the prison was noisy and messy at that moment. So, we might mishear it.

"Maybe... we really misheard it since... you saw your child's body."

Kisa thought, 'There's no such coincidence that both jailers misheard at the same time if they really got it wrong. If I have more than a child, where's the other child besides the dead child?'

Andrew and Ada came to her mind unconsciously.

'I did the DNA test, and the result showed Andrew and Ada were not my children.'

However, she still had a little hope in her heart while thinking about what the jailers had told her earlier.

Kisa lowered her eyes and slightly pushed the man in front of her away. She asked him in a deep voice, "Who is the mother of Andrew and Ada? Can you tell me now?"

Gilbert was stunned for a while. He did not expect her to mention the children's mother suddenly. He wanted to tell her about the child's parentage, but he still had some concerns.

'She hasn't completely forgiven me now. I don't know how much she loves Jensen and if she'll still misunderstand me because of what happened back then.

So, I'm unsure if she'll use the children against me. After all, the children like her much. I'm afraid if I tell her about their parentage before she's sincere with the children and me, the children will be hurt unnecessarily."

Gilbert held her shoulders, looked into her brooding eyes, and said firmly, "I'll tell you who their mother is when the time comes."

He did not answer her, and she did not ask again. After all, she was afraid that his answer would shatter the little hope in her heart. She would rather have some hope to cling to.

Gilbert would never expect his concern and concealment to cause misunderstandings and miseries that were hard to solve later. If he could predict what would happen later, he would have definitely told her all about Andrew and Ada's parentage now.

The mystery of the fire that year was still not completely solved, but the two jailers had told everything they knew. There was no point in continuing to stay in that village.

Moreover, Davian called and said something had happened in GK. He asked Gilbert to be back fast. So, they did not stay long and set off at noon.

Suddenly, Gilbert looked toward the east of the village coldly when getting into the car.

Chapter 713 Who Said Mr. Kooper Is Dead?

Gilbert told Kisa, "Those two jailers locked you in the cell and caused you to suffer for the burn, but you just let them go? I'll make them suffer if you want to revenge."

"What do you think of this place?" Kisa asked an irrelevant question suddenly.

Gilbert remained silent and looked at her with confusion.

Kisa looked around; all she saw were desolate mountains, dilapidated houses, and the distant horizon. This small village, located in the col, was extremely remote and decrepit.

She looked at

Gilbert, "They had been hiding for six years in fear. That's their punishment. Besides, even if they hadn't done those things at the time, others would have done it. It was ordered by the warden, after all."

Gilbert narrowed his eyes slightly, "I must find the warden."

"What if he passed away?"

Gilbert pursed his thin lips and said nothing.

Kisa said solemnly, "Besides that warden, we need to look for the woman they mentioned."

The warden just followed that woman's order. So, that woman was the real culprit of the arson.

Three cars drove out of the village one after another and raised a cloud of dust at the village's entrance.

In a dilapidated house, the two jailers were sitting on the ground in fear.

"We have done what you told us. Please don't kill us."

"That's... not enough."

A figure standing in front of them laughed grimly. The jailers' faces turned ashen.

Kisa kept silent on the way back. She stared out the window blankly as if she had something on her mind.

The bodyguard drove the car when they returned.

Gilbert sat next to Kisa at the back. He glanced at Kisa's preoccupied look and reached out to hold her hand after a while. "

'Anyway, at least this trip proved my innocence, right?' Kisa looked at him and said nothing.

Gilbert could not help but get so uneasy while seeing her icy look.

'The two jailers have proved that I have nothing to do with the fire. Why is she still cold to me? Is she going back on her word?'

Thinking of this, he said hastily, "We make a deal that day. We'll be back to the things used to be if I can prove my innocence this time. Do... you regret it? We were hostile in the past. Just saying when we first got married... At least give me a chance to treat you well," he said seriously.

Kisa withdrew her hand, pursed her lips, and said, "I'm tired. Let's talk after we're back." She turned her head to look out the window again after speaking.

Gilbert was a little depressed, but there was nothing he could do.

'I can't force her. It's impossible for her to forgive me immediately as I did many things that hurt her before. I can only win her heart back slowly.'

In GK International Building, Davian stopped several celebrities who wanted to terminate their contracts angrily, "What are you doing? Why? Isn't a big media company like GK better than the new swindler company?"

Another media company named Sharecorp popped up in the market in just two days. The momentum of poaching people was comparable to J & K Film Group back then.

Yanis Park said, "This is my third year at GK, and I haven't been a heroine once. Why not I get a try at a new company?"

Yanis was close to Sharon. She wanted to jump ship this time because of Sharon's instigation.

There were also a few female celebrities who were close to Sharon saying,

"That's right. GK is a big company, but the room to grow is too little."

"Besides, I heard GK had become a shell corporation now. GK will close down soon once Mr. Kooper is dead. We must find a new company quickly to avoid getting nothing."

Davian freaked out after hearing this. "Who said Mr. Kooper is dead?"
