Chapter 59 Isn't She Annabel

Annabel glanced back as she walked to the balcony and discovered that Rupert didn't follow her. Then she answered the phone. "Rory, what's up?"

"Annabel, I'd like to meet with you." Rory spoke in a gloomy tone.

Annabel agreed after some consideration. "Okay. Let's meet tomorrow at 10 a.m. at Blues Cafe."

She also had a lot to say to Rory.

"See you tomorrow then," Rory said quickly.

He wondered if he still had a chance with Annabel now that she accepted to go on a date with him. The following day was a weekend.

Annabel left early in the morning. She was used to being early. However, Rory arrived before her.

The Blues Cafe was located on Douburgh's busiest commercial street. It was a peaceful, pleasant setting to relax in.

Rory drove toward the commercial street, gripping the wheel firmly. Heather's car followed Rory's.

Today, she and her friends went out shopping.

Suddenly, Bella pointed to the car in front of them and stated, "Isn't that Rory?" «

Bella was a big fan of Rory. She couldn't help but fall in love with this tall and gorgeous man after seeing him on TV for the first time.

She was aware that he had returned a few days ago. She had tried everything she could to meet him, but she had never found an opportunity. She had no idea she would see him on the way.

"The car is far ahead of us. I can't see him," Heather said discontentedly. "Don't be silly, Bella. It's difficult to meet a superstar like Rory." Another friend agreed with Heather.

"I have good vision. I'm very confident it's Rory." Bella, unable to contain her excitement, fixed her gaze on the vehicle in front of them.

She felt confident that Rory was in the vehicle, despite the fact that they could only see the back of the car.

"Please, let's follow him. I want to ask him for an autograph and take a picture with him." Bella was so obsessed with Rory.

Now that she saw Rory while shopping with Heather, it indicated that they were fated to meet.

"If you want to follow him, you are free to. I don't have time." Heather's thoughts were entirely focused on Rupert, and she had no desire to pursue other men.

All right, Heather, I'll go." Bella was aware of Heather's anger, yet she couldn't resist her idol's charm. She got out of the car and called for a cab.

"Please, sir, follow the black car in front of us." Bella pointed at Rory's car in the distance.

"Which car?" The driver looked in the direction Bella was pointing,

"It's the black car right in front of us. Please hurry!" Bella urged nervously.

They were a little late. And the taxi driver lost sight of Rory's vehicle. Annabel found Rory waiting for her at the Blues Cafe.

He had booked the entire cafe so that no one would bother them.

Rory sat in a corner beside the window, gazing at the door with his deep eyes until the girl he was obsessed with appeared in his sight. "Annabel." Rory rose to his feet and approached her.

Annabel wore a white dress that was beautifully cut and showed off her perfect form. Her delicate features revealed that she was capable, graceful, and gorgeous

She was still the girl in his memory that made his heart race.

"Hello, Rory. I apologize for being late." Annabel approached, smiling. "Don't apologize. I'm the one who arrived early."

Rory looked at Annabel lovingly. He pulled out the chair for her. "I ordered your favorite Mocha."

"Thank you," Annabel replied as she sat down.

"I haven't seen you in months. You are still stunning and charming." Rory complimented her.

Even her action of sipping coffee was appealing to him.

Annabel was a little embarrassed and quickly changed the subject. "Why did you come back suddenly? If I remember well, you signed a contract with a well-known film company."

"I canceled the contract." Rory shrugged.

"What? But why?" Annabel was astounded. "Isn't it your dream to be the best movie star in the world? What made you give up so suddenly?" "The dream is nothing in comparison to love." Rory looked intently at Annabel. "I don't think you love Rupert. You did that on purpose, right? You want me to give up, don't you?"

"Rory, please stop being childish!" Annabel was irritated. "Whether I love Rupert or not has nothing to do with you. Don't you know what would happen if you terminated your contract just like that?"

"I'll bear the responsibility," Rory said firmly. "Besides, I think our country is better for my career. So, I intend to concentrate on the domestic market."

"It's not up to you to make that decision. Why are you impetuous?" Annabel scowled.

It wasn't an impulsive decision. I have my reason. I've made a detailed strategy. I'll show you in a few days. You'll undoubtedly agree with me by then," Rory stated with a determined look in his eyes.

Annabel maintained her long face. Despite her agreement with Rory's plans, he still did so without consulting her.

"You'd better show it to me soon as possible." Annabel frowned. "Even so, you shouldn't have made rash decisions or talked nonsense in front of the media. I read the trending topics yesterday. Don't you think it's inappropriate to say that?"

"No. I don't think so. Acting is my profession, but my life is more than that. What I want to do most is share my achievement and happiness with the girl I love," Rory stated solemnly.

His dark brown eyes sparked mysteriously. He suddenly stretched his hand and held Annabel's. "Annabel, you know the girl I'm talking about, right?"

Bella eventually found Rory's car in the parking lot and took the elevator to Blues Cafe.

She stopped by the door and looked around. No one was in the cafe.

She wondered whether she was in the wrong place.

Disappointed, Bella turned to look elsewhere when she noticed a man and a woman sitting in the corner of the cafe.

She recognized the man even though she could only see their side faces from her viewpoint. He was Rory, the man she had admired for a long time.

And the woman looked familiar. Bella was taken aback when she realized that it was Annabel.
