

Chapter 14 Seeing through Steward's pain

After watching this video, he still could not believe Nora had died. He thought she must have stayed in a certain place to have a rest.

Steward watched the video again and again so Mrs. Hill asked him, "Didn't Nora tell you about this?"

After saying that, Mrs. Hill was a little awkward. Steward and Nora seemed not very close to each other. No wonder she did not tell these to Steward.

"I hope Nora has a good rest and starts a new chapter of her life. She is still young and she will find someone who truly loves her. I sometimes blame myself for making you two get married. At that time, neither Nora nor I knew you had already had a girlfriend. She had had a crush on you for a long time. When she was going to marry you, she had the happiest smile I had ever seen on her face.

"I have heard from your mother that your girlfriend went back these days. I hope things are going well. I still remembered that Nora said she wanted to be your eyes." said Mrs. Hill.

Mentioning "eyes", Mrs. Hill stopped talking and stared at Steward's eyes. Her eyes gradually turned red.

"What's the matter, Mrs. Hill?" asked Steward.

"Out of no reason, I felt sad when I saw your eyes..."

Steward was shocked and his face turned pale. He remembered what Mia said to him.

He tried his best to stay calm and said goodbye to Mrs. Hill. When he got into his car, he called Leo.

"Find out who donated the cornea to me." said Steward.

Leo did not reply immediately but kept silent for a while. Steward realized that Leo might have already known the answer to this question.

"Why aren't you talking, Leo?" he scolded him and his heart started beating faster.

"Mr. Mandel, I know where your cornea came from." Leo replied and he did not expect Steward to ask this question so soon.

Leo took a deep breath and what he was going to say plunged Steward into the dark depths of despair, "It was from Mrs. Mandel,"

"Totally nonsense!"

Steward's face was distorted by surprise. He could barely breathe.

He could not believe what he was told. He thought Mia was lying, Leo was lying, and the whole world was lying to him.

Leo saw through Steward's pain of losing Mrs. Mandel. Sometimes, he thought Mr. Mandel deserved it while sometimes he felt worried about Mr. Mandel.

If Mr. Mandel really hated Mrs. Mandel, he wouldn't be so painful right now.

All these showed that Mr. Mandel loved Mrs. Mandel.

So this time, he had to tell the truth to Mr. Mandel.

"I overheard outside the operating room that Mrs. Mandel donated both her cornea and kidney. If you do not believe me, you can ask the doctor who did the surgery for Mrs. Mandel."

"So where is she right now? Where did she go after the surgery? I have to know where she is right now! Maybe she is hidden by Mia..."

"Mrs. Mandel died. I heard her doctor saying she was in cardiac arrest.

Every word of Leo, like a knife, cut him through his heart. He did not know what to do. He could only feel the pain.

"You are lying, all of you are lying..."

Steward hung up the phone and his eyes started aching.

His eye doctor told him to have a healthy diet and use electronic devices less. He should use his eyes less and have a stable mood in order to help him to get better recovery.

But he just couldn't stop himself from crying. His eyes were burning.

He rarely cried even if he had a car accident two years ago. He could not imagine there would be one day when his tears were uncontrollable like a faucet.

He paid a private detective to find out where Mia lived.

And he also went straight to the hospital to find Nora's doctor.

"Oh, I remember Nora. She was a pretty woman. I feel very sorry for her," the expert took out Nora's X-ray and explained to Steward, "she had a malignant tumour and the surgery had a low success rate."