

Chapter 18 Some similar words hurt

Ann was very delighted to hear that and she lay her body on his chest, starting to touch his body.

Steward frowned because he noticed that the perfume did not smell like Nora...

He immediately pushed Ann away and was about to vomit.

Ann did not expect Steward to push her and believed it was all because of the alcohol. She decided to take off her robe...

The next morning, before Steward opened his eyes, he had a great headache.

When he was in the club with Gabriel, he kept drinking and now he had a strong hangover.

He stretched himself and froze when he realized that there was a naked woman in his arms...

Steward pushed her away as if the woman before him was a monster.

Seeing Ann naked, he changed his countenance and said in surprise, "Why are you here?"

He took a look at himself and luckily found that he was clothed.

Steward remembered that he was with Gabriel last night but how come he was in bed with Ann who was naked? Damn it! He could not remember anything.

Ann stared at him with innocent eyes and said,

"You were drunk and Gabriel asked me to send you to the hotel."

Last night, Gabriel helped her to move Steward to the bed and left without saying anything.

It was obvious that Gabriel had no problem with them being together.

Steward looked livid and thought, "What the hell was Gabriel doing?"

Ann held his hands and tried to lure him with her plump body, saying, "Steward, since we are both single, we can be together again."

But then she thought, "Why did he always avert his eyes? I was bold enough to attract him. Did I mean nothing to him?"

She was on her knees on the bed with her arms around his neck, saying with sexual attraction, "We missed each other the past two years...and we had the best sex with each other..."

Steward was a man but she did not turn him on at all.

All of a sudden, Steward thought of Nora's body. She was very skinny with a slim waist.

Thinking of Nora, Steward, uncontrollably, put his hands on Ann's waist. When he touched the scar left from the surgery, his hands couldn't stop shaking.

Nora's kidney was in her body!

Ann felt his touch and asked, "Do you think this scar is ugly? Later I am going to remove it."

Steward realized Ann was such a selfish woman and pushed her away.

In his eyes, no matter how beautiful Ann's body was, she was ugly inside.

"You had uremia. Is that true?" asked Steward.

"Did you know about this?" Ann was pushed to the bed with a guilty look on her face.

Steward clenched his fists and then unclenched.

Why couldn't he trust Nora's words at that time? How could he believe whatever Ann said without asking Leo to find out the truth?

He was such a jerk. Nora had already told him the truth and he did not believe her and even pushed her in the dark depths of despair.

"Dear, I did not mean to cheat you. At that time, only Nora's kidney matched for me but I knew she wouldn't donate it. I did not want to die. There was no time for me! I wanted to be alive and come back to you, Steward!"

"And Nora was the reason why we had to be separate for the past two years. She owed me!"

Ann cried and saw a livid and indifferent look on his face. Why didn't he comfort and forgive her as she had expected?

"Does he really love Nora?" Ann thought.

Steward coldly watched her clown-like performance, and suddenly remembered that he had said something similar to Nora. He once said to her, "You owed her. You are the reason why she had to leave me. You deserve all this!"

He had the nerve to say that to Nora! Hearing similar words made him feel very guilty!

He felt helpless and asked while knowing the answer, "Why didn't you come back when Nora went to you two years ago?"
