

The Ex-Husband's Revenge By Dragonsky

Chapter 287

Chapter 287

"You bumpkin! We are all of age now, so why can't we go?" Louisa straightened her back proudly.

When she was younger, her parents kept a close eye on her and she could not go to a bar, but she was recently freed from their restraints and had just celebrated her eighteenth birthday.

For someone as playful as Louisa, she was determined to go to a bar out of curiosity.

"Yeah, we are technically adults now." Annie itched to go as well.

Both Annie and Louisa came from wealthy families and were more prone to seeking excitement.

"Let's not. Those places are dangerous. Let's not go..." Lacey whispered.

"What's there to fear? This is a civilized society. A bar is just a similar thing to a karaoke club! Lacey, don't worry. This is my treat! Let's have some fun!" Louisa said, before grabbing her friends by the arms and leading them out of the campus.

"No. You can't go to a bar!" Leon darted up to stand in their ways.

"Move away! Stay out of my way! We can go anywhere we want! If you don't want to go, you can catch a taxi and ride home on your own!" Louisa glared at him. She did not like Leon to begin with and began to feel annoyed at him for stopping her from doing what she wanted.

"But..." Leon was rendered speechless and since he was no one to Louisa, he had no rights to interfere with her choices. "... I guess I'll come along, then."

He compromised. With him along, they should not be in any danger.

The Blue Moon Bar was a luxurious bar and though it was not at night, there were still plenty of customers inside since it was situated in a busy area close to Springfield University.

As soon as Leon and the others walked in, they were immediately greeted by the deafening music played on the immersive sound system. There were light projections and an extravagant-looking bar, making it look as though they were in a music festival. The bar was incredibly spacious with over two thousand square feet.

In the middle of the bar was a gigantic stage stood three female singers in revealing outfits. They sang and danced, pushing the hype in the air to the peak.

There were young people dancing along to the music to their hearts' content around the stage.

Leon and the others headed toward the bar and the group immediately caught other customers' attention.

"What beauty!"

"Those three look so good!"

"Yeah, especially the one in the middle. She's as beautiful as a fallen angel!"

"The other two aren't bad either. One looks innocent and the other has a good body."

"I wonder who that man is. Lucky him to come to a bar with three beautiful women!"

The crowd was enchanted by Louisa's sophisticated beauty that rivaled that of Iris and Cynthia, who were two of the most beautiful women in Springfield City.

A beauty like that was a rare gem.
