

My Poor Husband Is A Billionaire Chapter 1256

The Substitute Wife: My Poor Husband Is A Billionaire Chapter 1256

Carly patted the old woman's hand to comfort her.

"Grandma, it's okay. Don't be afraid."

The old woman moved closer to Carly, feeling uncomfortable. "Miss White, what's going on here?" Carly looked at Janet with a frown.

"I thought your studio was located in a nice place. Why are there so many reporters all of a sudden?"

The main reason Carly had chosen Janet as their designer was that her studio was located in a quiet place, and her grandmother would not feel uncomfortable.

Her grandmother had moved from the countryside and had not adapted herself to the loud and busy city life yet.

Carly had to persuade her grandmother for a long time before she finally agreed to let Carly order a custom-designed birthday dress for her.

Carly was shocked to see such a scene just when they were arriving at the studio.

Janet was helpless and unprepared to handle the predicament that Clyde put her in because he brought his reporter friends over unannounced.

If she had known earlier, she would have shut the door on Clyde's face.

As soon as the reporters saw the clients, they immediately surrounded them with their microphones and cameras.

"What kind of style and design are you looking for?"

"Are you here to let Miss White design your clothes? How much are you offering her? Do you know, the price of her last order was tens of thousands of dollars?"

"What?"

The old woman gasped in shock when she heard the price.

She hurriedly signaled to Carly and said, "Sweetie, I am glad with your kind intention, but don't spend so much money on me! I can wear something else. I don't need such expensive clothes."

At that moment, Lexi appeared before them with two cups of coffee.

"Ladies, have some coffee first. We can go inside and discuss the design."

The old woman was already intimidated because of the price the reporters mentioned, so she did not even dare to take the coffee.

Shaking her head, she refused, "Isn't this coffee very expensive? We are not thirsty. We don't need it, thanks."

Carly felt bad when she saw her grandmother scared.

Holding her grandmother's hand, she comforted gently, "It's okay, Grandma. If you don't want to be here, we can leave."

She then turned around and left with the old woman without even looking at Janet.

"Miss Reed, it was an accident,"

Janet tried to explain in a hurry while stopping Carly from leaving.

Carly glanced at her with disappointment and said in a low voice, "Miss White, I only brought my grandma here because I trusted you. I never thought you would disrespect our agreement."

Janet didn't know how to explain and kept pleading, "Miss Reed, it's not intentional. I did not do this."

However, Carly only felt that she was making excuses and sneered, "There's no need for you to say all that. I thought you were different from those arrogant designers, but I did not think that I could have the wrong idea about you."

She held her grandmother's hand and left without looking back.

As Janet watched Carly and her grandmother's receding figures, she felt aggrieved and angry.

She felt aggrieved because she was misunderstood, and she was angry at Clyde for deciding things on his own without consulting her.

The reporters didn't notice Janet's expression darken.

They kept clicking photos of Carly and her grandmother while flattering Janet.

"Miss White, you are wise to have your own standards for choosing clients. Not everyone deserves your efforts."

"Yes, that old woman looked so poor. She definitely couldn't have been able to afford the commission. Fortunately, Miss White was wise enough not to accept her order."

"Miss White, the clothes you designed must be elegant and refined, just like the ones designed by Draco Wesley. Poor people like them are not qualified to wear such outfits."

Those mean words felt like needles piercing Janet's heart.

Hannah, the person Janet considered her own grandmother, was as frugal and simple as Carly's grandmother. When she brought Hannah to the big city, Hannah had also been very cautious, fearing that she might be too troublesome for Janet. Hence, Janet was able to completely understand Carly's anger and was disgusted by the reporters' arrogance.