

Chapter 22 A diary book in her room

He went straight into Nora's room. Though he had been blind for the last two years, the villa was decorated to his liking, in a style of simplicity and frigidity.

But her room was filled with all kinds of stuffed animals. There were also an animal-shaped sofa, many tiny lights, and beautiful hangings.

"Like a little girl," thought Steward.

He imagined in his mind that her little body hugged the huge stuffed animal.

In her room, he could still smell Nora. He took a slow breath and closed the window.

Seeing that the blood stains on his hands had stained the window, he hurriedly took out the tissue to wipe it clean, and then went to the bathroom to wash off the remaining blood on his hands. He searched for the gauze in the medicine box, and then put it around his hands.

The gauze was prepared by Nora but he did not use it once.

She took care of him very well and he seldom got hurt.

He suddenly noticed that there was a diary book beside the pillow but it was locked by a small lock. His sanity told him not to open it but finally he opened the notebook.

On the flyleaf, she wrote, "If one day I forget him, please help me remember." with a smile after that.

It seemed that those words were written recently.

He kept reading and found out that she started writing this diary book after their engagement.

"Today, mommy told me the big news. I was almost screaming when I heard that. It had always been my dream to be together with Steward! My dream will soon come true. Mom told me that Steward would like me and I was like, "Of course he will. I am so cute and lovely." But I did not speak that out. I want Steward to love me."

"When Steward came back from abroad, I was going to study abroad. So I hadn't seen him for like seven or eight years. I imagined how he would react to my appearance. Maybe he would be surprised about my change. I am no longer that little girl who always chased him. So before I saw him, I dressed up and daddy even made fun of me because of that."

"How could I think Steward would love me? My dream finally turned out to be a nightmare. He looked at me coldly and I was afraid to face him. I had been so silly. Even if we had been staying with each other for the last seven or eight years, it did not mean he would like me. It is a very sad thing when someone you love does not love you back."

“Steward’s girlfriend left. He chased her eagerly and had a car accident on the way to the airport. When I was sitting outside the operating room, I was thinking that Steward did not do anything wrong but why he would end up like this. I kept thinking about this until my head started to ache. Why didn’t he love me back?”

“I went to Sebroiria to beg Ann to come back and I even knelt down before her. I explained to her a hundred times that Steward did not betray her but she was indifferent. Before I came back, I decided to persuade her again but what I saw was that she was wearing her wedding dress and holding hands with another guy, walking out of the church. It was so difficult for me to just be separate from Steward but how could Ann give up on him so easily?”

“Steward decided to marry me! After we got registered, I still could not believe we had gotten married. I was staring at the photo on the marriage certificate and couldn’t stop smiling. Gabriel saw my silly smile but I did not care. I wanted everyone in the world to know how happy I was.”
