

Chapter 39 Bitter sweetness

As for Mrs. Hill, she had stopped crying and led Nora into the room.

But Nora did not move and she shook Steward's hand, "Steward..."

He smiled and said, "Let's get in there. This is your home too."

And then all of them went in. This was the first time Gabriel came to Nora's parents' home and he was amazed by the quaint building.

"Woof, woof, woof..."

In the yard, the little dog was running toward her with its tongue sticking out and the noise of the wheels of its scooter.

It still remembered Nora and excitedly lifted its paws on Nora's legs.

"Nora, do you remember that you sent this little dog to me? Now it had gained much weight and became round. Maybe you can touch it," said Mrs. Hill.

This time, faced with something unfamiliar, Nora was not scared and she looked down at the little dog and crouched down to stroke it.

The dog rubbed her palm with its head. When she felt the soft touch, she said happily, "A moving doll!"

"It is your dog and it likes you very much," Steward said and touched her head.

“My dog?” Nora tilted her head and kept stroking the dog, saying, “I love you, my dog.”

In the afternoon when they had lunch, Steward took Nora to the yard and they played with the dog.

Nora could not see but she tirelessly threw the Frisbee. The dog fetched it back for her and then she threw it again.

Mrs. Mandel saw this and smiled at Mrs. Hill, “Steward could take care of Nora well. You can trust him.”

“I don’t think so. Even if Nora can not see anything, he doesn’t deserve her.” Gabriel disagreed with her.

Unexpectedly, Mrs. Mandel was not angry at his words but said, “In fact, I think so too. But love needs no reason and they two love each other.”

Mia frowned and controlled herself from revealing what Steward had done to Nora.

And Mrs. Hill thanked her repeatedly and she almost fell to her knees.

Mia felt like her heart was tormented by an invisible force, and she watched Steward and Nora. She thought Nora fell into the clutches of the devil Steward again, and could not be dismantled.

Even if Nora lost her memories, she still fell in love with Steward.

They are meant to be with each other.

Even Mrs. Hill thought it was the force of fate.

Nora was happy with him. It was not a good idea to separate them.

And she saw clearly that Steward truly loved Nora for his eyes were filled with love for her.

After dinner, Mia and Gabriel left and so did Mrs. Mandel who said she would come again tomorrow.

Mrs. Hill could hardly bear to leave her daughter so she asked Nora and Steward to stay. They slept in Nora's room.

Nora was very happy today and she had fun with the dog. She behaved like a kid who always ate snacks but never meals. Steward was amused by her but also worried about her.

After living a short while in her parent's home, Nora was much closer to her family. Even when she was not with Steward, she wouldn't feel scared at home.

When they arrived at their home, Nora said to Steward secretly, "I have asked mom and she told me the difference between men and women."

"Really?" he smiled, " Explain to me."

But soon, Steward's smile froze because Nora put one of her hands on his chest and the other on his men's area...

"Men were smaller up here and bigger down there."

His mother must have taught Nora these words.

Steward breathed a little faster. He wanted to push her away and also wanted her hands to stay. It was bitter sweetness.

He gritted his teeth and threw her hands away. But she kept pinching his men's area and asked out of curiosity, "Why this place is getting bigger? I could not see it. Did you hide something in your pocket, Steward?"

He's a man and he could not stand it anymore.
