

Chapter 43 I will have a divorce anyway.

Steward froze for a while and his heart contracted instantly. He felt his wounds hurt more, with his face and lips turning pale.

The day finally came...

That's still good news. She finally regained her memories.

Though he was really happy when she was totally dependent on him since Nora had lost her memories. Steward still hoped she would regain her memories.

Because he wanted Nora to remember what they had gone through since their childhood and he wanted her to remember she once deeply loved him.

If she never regained her memories, she would be like a child with a grown-up body who lost her soul. She would still be Nora but not the one he was familiar with.

Steward calmed down and stopped asking questions about Nora. What he should do now was to get fully recovered.

Nora asked Mia to draw up a simple divorce agreement, stating she would give up the her share of marital property because she wanted to divorce him quickly.

Mia hesitated, "Nora, have you made up your mind? What about the baby?"

"I am not in a good physical condition... so I don't want this baby." Nora smiled very lightly, "I am no longer the stupid woman who would do anything for Steward. I want to take care of myself and accompany my family."

Once she would die for a man but now she treasured more about herself. She could let Steward go.

When Steward saw Gabriel bring the divorce paper, his heart was totally broken. His face turned pale and he tore off the paper.

"I still have another..." Gabriel took a pile of divorce paper with Nora's signature on it, which suggested Nora had made up her mind.

Steward smiled bitterly. Now it was him who didn't want to have a divorce. It was his retribution.

"I need to talk to her..."

Gabriel nodded, "You can talk to her later. Nora also came to the hospital and went to the O.B."

"Is she uncomfortable?" Steward was still worried about her.

"I heard that she was going to have an abortion."

As soon as he heard this, Steward was astonished and he quickly got up.

"Why didn't you tell me earlier?"

He pulled out the needle on the back of his hand and then ran out of the ward with one hand pressing his heart. He grabbed a doctor and shouted, "Where is the O.B. ward?"

If Nora gave up on him, whether they signed the divorce paper or not didn't matter.

But if they had a baby, they would be specially connected by it!

He would never let her have the abortion.

Gabriel sighed and followed Steward, "I know where she is, this way."

It only took a few minutes to get there but Steward was in great suffering. He prayed in his heart and hoped she hadn't started the abortion.

He found she was sitting in the corridor and thought he came in time.

"Nora!"

Hearing this, Nora was a little nervous and she frowned, thinking, "How did he know?"

She stayed in silence and seemed not to talk to him. Steward's eyes started watering.

"This baby... This baby is innocent," he crouched down, begging, "Please, don't do this..."

Nora was sad already but she still smiled, "I am not healthy enough to have this baby, we might all die when I gave birth."

Steward was totally shocked and felt really cold. What she said terrified him.

"Nora's safety comes first," he thought. Immediately he gave up the idea of letting her give birth to this baby.

“I will take care of you after the operation...”

“I don’t need you.”

The air seemed to freeze and they both stayed silent.

This was the first time for Steward to know how it felt when treated indifferently.

She was being indifferent to him only once while he had treated her like this a hundred times. He finally realized what she had gone through during their marriage.

Mia walked out of the doctor’s office. When she saw Steward was here, she glared at Gabriel and thought, “He is a such betrayer. I shouldn’t have told him about this. Men are always on men’s side.”

Gabriel touched his nose, feeling guilty. He told Steward about this because he felt sorry for him. He did not expect Mia to be angry at him. “I take credit for Steward,” he thought.

“Nora...” Mia did not know what to say at this moment.

Nora made up her mind and said to Steward, “I don’t want to see you anymore. If you don’t sign the divorce paper, let’s take this to the court. I will have a divorce anyway.”