

Chapter 1425 The Reason For Suicide

Jeremy was three years older than his sister. When she was in junior high, he was already in his first year of high school.

The high school he attended was a boarding school, meaning he could only return home on weekends. His sister had always been very attached to him, and he had always doted on her in return. Their bond was one where they could share anything and everything.

One weekend when Jeremy returned home as usual, he noticed a change in his sister's behavior. Instead of running to greet him as she typically would, she was secluded in her room, cheeks flushed as she diligently sketched something in her notebook.

Intrigued, Jeremy snuck a peek at his sister's notebook and found it filled with the name of a boy.

That boy was Brandon. 2

At that time, Jeremy was oblivious to the fact that this boy would end up causing such a drastic turn of events in his sister's life. Teasing her lightly, he said, "Hey, little sis, have you developed a crush?" Startled, she quickly shut her notebook, her face reddening even more.

"Jeremy, why are you sneaking around like a cat? You scared me," she exclaimed, clutching her notebook tightly.

With a teasing tone, Jeremy read the name aloud from the notebook, "B-ran-don. Who's this?" 5

Under Jeremy's questioning, his sister admitted to her teenage infatuation. As she spoke of Brandon, her bright eyes shimmered with a profound fondness for the boy.

At the time, Jeremy didn't think much of it. He perceived it as nothing more than a typical schoolgirl crush on a handsome boy. He even ribbed his sister about it, delighting in her blushes. 1

However, as time passed, his sister gradually grew more subdued. Initially, she would blush and act shy when Jeremy teased her about her crush, but eventually, she seemed to numb, responding with silence.

Suspecting that she was being bullied, Jeremy asked her several times about her situation at school.

But his gentle, timid sister never told him the truth. Instead, she chose to bury all the pain deep in her heart, keeping her silence.

Whenever Jeremy questioned her, she'd deflect, saying she was having trouble with her studies. Believing her, Jeremy didn't press further.

It was on a sunny afternoon while he was attending a P.E. class when he received the news of his little sister's death.

By the time he arrived at the hospital, all he saw was a white sheet covering her lifeless body.

He wanted to lift the white cloth to see her face one last time, but he couldn't summon the courage to do so.

The doctors had warned Jeremy against seeing her, as his sister had jumped from a significant height, leaving her body gruesomely disfigured.

So, Jeremy refrained.

He feared the sight of her shattered form, choosing instead to preserve the memory of her vibrant smile.

Jeremy endured a period of excruciating grief and even considered suicide, hoping to join his sister. However, every time the thought surfaced, the unresolved mystery surrounding her death spurred him to persevere, investigating the circumstances that led to her end.

As he delved into the matter, he unearthed a startling revelation.

Jeremy discovered from his investigations at his sister's school that her infatuation with Brandon had been exposed to other schoolgirls, many of whom also harbored feelings for Brandon. Consequently, she became a target of relentless bullying, enduring daily humiliations such as being slapped or having her homework torn apart.

She was too afraid to report it to the teachers, and even if she had, it wouldn't have mattered, as the primary tormentor was the daughter of a wealthy family, leaving the school authorities indifferent.

In the final incident, the bullies stripped his sister and took pictures, threatening to show them to Brandon. This physical and psychological torment culminated in her feeling so helpless and desperate that she chose to end her life.

Ever since, Jeremy had been consumed by immense guilt and self-loathing, berating himself for his obliviousness and impotence. But even more so, he loathed those who had driven his sister to her death. 2

Specifically, Brandon, the object of his sister's affection, became his chief adversary. Jeremy yearned for nothing more than his utter demise. 1

Over the years, Jeremy had devoted countless hours and immeasurable effort to bringing his sister's bullies to justice in his own way. One by one, they faced their comeuppance, and now Brandon was the final one.

Jeremy had painstakingly plotted and prepared to make Brandon undergo the same despair his little sister had experienced before her untimely death.

As he concluded his story, Jeremy regarded Brandon with sorrow-laden eyes. "Now do you understand why I want to kill you? Because you were the root cause of it all. If not for you, my sister would never have been subjected to such torment!"

After hearing Jeremy's accusation, Brandon finally grasped the chain of events. Despite this, he felt that Jeremy's animosity was misdirected. "I'm sorry for your loss, but I had nothing to do with your sister's death," he protested.
