Chapter 752

Quincy said with a smile, “Since Thea wants to follow, let her come with us.” “Hmph!” Thea snorted. Ignoring Quincy, she tried to help James into the car. “I can do it myself.” James shook her hand off and got into the car without anyone’s help. Thea quickly got into the car and sat beside him.

Not wanting to be outdone, Quincy walked to the other side of the vehicle. She opened the door and sat on the other side of James.

After everyone got in their respective vehicles, the team set off slowly to their destination.

Shortly after getting into the car, James leaned back and closed his eyes to rest.

Thea held his hand intimately and asked with a smile, “Honey, where are we going?”

Quincy criticized her, “Can you be quiet? James needs to rest right now.”

Thea retorted, “I’m talking to my husband right now. What does it have to do with you?” 2

“You...”

Quincy was furious.

James opened his eyes, looked at Thea, and said in dissatisfaction, "Can you keep it down? You're being very annoying right now. If you say another word, you'll have to get off the car immediately." Hearing this, Thea stopped talking. She held on to James' hand and leaned her head on his shoulder. Only now did she realize how comfortable James' shoulder was. She hoped for things to remain like this for the rest of her life.

The car moved quickly.

Soon, they arrived at the vicinity of Mount Dragon Treasure, located at the junction of Cansington and North Cansington.

At the vicinity of Mount Dragon Treasure...

The off-road vehicles parked on the roadside, and people quickly got off.

James got out of the car, stood at the roadside, and looked at the hundred-meter-wide river in the distance.

He pointed at it and said, "Set up a tent by the riverbank."

Daniel ordered, "What is everyone doing? Get moving! Start setting up our camp."

All of the soldiers were from special forces and acted quickly. They took out their bags from the vehicles and hurriedly walked toward the riverside to set up their camp. James sat on a rock near the riverside.

Daniel went over to him and handed him a cigarette. "I quit smoking." James waved his hand and refused it. Daniel lit his cigarette and looked at the hundred-meter-wide river in front of them. He asked, "James, what are you looking for?"

James explained, "An underground cavern. Daniel, send someone to ask the nearby residents if there are any caverns around this area." "Alright." Daniel nodded.

Then, he gestured to a few several soldiers. "You guys, come over here."

The soldiers quickly trotted over.

Daniel instructed, "Scout the area for any residents. Ask them if there's an underground cavern nearby."

"Alright."

The soldiers quickly dispersed.

Meanwhile, in the Capital...

In the Emperor's Mansion. The Emperor sat on a sofa with his legs crossed. A middle-aged man stood in front of him.

"What is James doing after returning to Cansington?"

The Emperor asked indifferently.

The middle-aged man standing in front of him replied, "Nothing much. However, he did borrow dozens of soldiers from the Blithe King. They headed to the suburbs this morning, seemingly looking for something.” “He borrowed soldiers from the Blithe King?”

The Emperor frowned and ordered, “Find out what he’s looking for.”

“Understood. I’ll send someone to spy on him.”

“Alright. You’re dismissed,” The Emperor waved his hand and said.

The subordinate turned around and left.

The Emperor gently massaged his temples.

“James, James. You’re getting on my nerves. It doesn’t matter that I crippled you. I can’t sleep or eat in peace with you alive. You can’t blame me for this.”

As long as James was still alive, he would be a threat to the Emperor.

Unless he was killed, the Emperor would not be at peace.

The Emperor took out his phone and dialed a number.

“Get some people to kill James. Be sure not to leave any traces behind.”
