

I'm A Quadrillionaire chapter 1647 –

Chapter 1647

David looked at the young woman in front of him.

She looked to be in her twenties.

She was not very beautiful and she was a little worse than Celia and the others, but she was still very attractive and full of youthful vigor.

If David did not say yes, judging from her posture, she would not let him leave.

'It's just a glass of wine, so it won't take much time.

'It can also be regarded as a chance for the Allen family to repay their gratitude lest they are unable to get over it.'

Therefore, he said, "Let's go in and have a drink then."

After speaking, David turned and walked towards the tavern.

"Sir, please!" Magus said happily.

He was also very happy to be able to do something for his benefactor.

Then, Magus invited the three law enforcers again. "My Lords, please come in and have a drink too! Let me do the honors."

"We will humbly accept your offer then." The three of them walked into the Allen Tavern together.

However, they were not there for the drink, instead, they wanted to get acquainted with Doctor David.

All three of them were the most basic law enforcers of the Central Sacred Continent.

In the eyes of these civilians, they looked like they had everything together.

However, only they knew how much they were suffering.

They all wanted to climb the ranks.

However, their family had no power, so they could not give them any help.

In the end, they could only stay at the lowest level and do the dirty work.

If they could get to know someone with money and a background like Doctor David, they might have opportunities to progress in the future.

David and the three law enforcers entered the Allen Tavern one after another.

The middle-aged woman and Marigold also went in to receive them.

Only then did Magus bow to the crowd and said, "Everyone, since I have to receive the benefactor of the Allen family and the law enforcers today, I won't invite you all to come in, but I will invite everyone to come in for a drink in two days to thank you for your support of the Allen Tavern over the years. Thank you!"

After speaking, he turned and entered the tavern. He closed the door and hung a sign that read, 'We will not receive guests today.'

The crowd of onlookers gradually dispersed.

In the end, only a dozen or so people from Black Water remained there.

Magus did not invite them in for a drink, which embarrassed the leader of Black Water.

He really wanted to just walk away and ignore the change of ownership of the Allen Tavern.

After all, he was sure Magus would come begging for him to assist with this soon.

However, the law enforcer told him to stay just now so he did not dare to leave.

Black Water would suffer if they dared to offend the law enforcers.

His boss would also skin him alive.

Thus, he could only wait obediently outside the door.

After David and the three law enforcers entered the Allen family tavern, they were brought to a clean and tidy private room.

Marigold went to make some food with her mother.

Soon, Magus brought a jar of old wine from the cellar.

Then, he poured it out for David and the three law enforcers respectively.

The smell of old wine immediately filled the whole room.

“My Lord, my grandfather brewed this jar of old wine and it has been stored in the cellar for nearly a hundred years. I have been reluctant to drink it all this while. If it weren't for you all, the Allen Tavern would not belong to us anymore. Come, let me propose a toast to you all.”

After Magus finished speaking, he drank the old wine in his hand.

“Magus, we didn't do much. It's all thanks to the doctor. If you want to thank someone, you should thank him,” said one of the law enforcers.

“My Lord, you can't say that! I have seen how you fought for the Allen family. I want to thank you and also the doctor.”

Magus filled more wine for himself again before lifting the glass.

“It's just a little effort, don't take it to heart!” David also picked up the wine glass in his hand.

Clink!

The four wine glasses touched, making a crisp sound.

When the old wine entered his mouth, David felt that it was indeed delicious.

It was not very strong.

When it was in his mouth, the fragrance of the wine rushed straight to his head. Even after swallowing, there was still a lingering fragrance in his mouth.

Chapter 1648

When he was on Earth, David was often dragged out by his roommates to drink. They would say it was for socializing between dormitories and the like.

He would feel unwell every time he drank.

He found it difficult to swallow every time he had alcohol in his mouth.

As a result, David never liked drinking very much.

This time, however, it did not feel that way at all.

He swallowed it unconsciously.

After finishing one glass, David wanted another.

'Could drinking be so easy?'

"My Lords, how's the wine?" Magus asked.

"It's amazing! This is the best wine I've ever had!" David praised without hesitation.

"It's really good! The three of us have never drunk such good wine."

"Haha! I'm happy as long as you like it. Come, let's have another drink," Magus said with a big smile.

He had been dealing with alcohol since he was born.

He liked brewing, and he also liked drinking.

Magus was naturally very happy when he heard the four complimenting the delicious wine of the Allen family.

The food was served one by one.

The five chatted while eating and drinking and the atmosphere was very harmonious.

The three law enforcers wanted to get acquainted with David, and David also admired the fairness and strictness of the three law enforcers.

Magus kept pouring the wine.

All five exchanged contact information with each other.

This was possibly the first time David had drunk such a delicious wine, so he kept wanting to drink more.

After drinking for three rounds, the three law enforcers stood up and said goodbye.

They still had official duties to attend to.

The purpose of them coming here was also to get to know David.

Now that their goal had been achieved, they should leave.

The wine would have absolutely no effect on the three Universe Realm law enforcers.

Magus sent the three out of the tavern.

The two parties agreed to change the ownership of the tavern from Mosi to Magus tomorrow.

The leader of Black Water waited outside the tavern for a long time, but the law enforcers asked him to come back tomorrow with the contract.

He was pissed.

'You are full of wine and food.

'But I'm still f*cking hungry!'

Even if he was pissed, he would still come tomorrow.

He could not afford to offend the law enforcers.

Even if the opponents were the most basic law enforcers, he still could not afford to offend them.

Inside the Allen Tavern, David drank the rest of the wine with Magus.

This was the best drink he had ever had.

"Magus, I'm done drinking so I should leave. I only did you a small favor. I've drank so much so we don't owe each other anything anymore. Don't feel like you owe me anything in the future," David stood up and said.

"Mr. Lidell, don't say that. Without you, we would not be able to keep the Allen Tavern. How can such a great kindness be offset by a drink?" Magus stood up quickly and said.

"We're friends, aren't we?"

"Of course! It is an honor to have a friend like you, Mr. Lidell."

"Since we are friends, don't worry about it so much. Friends should help each other. Alright, I'm leaving. From now on, you will be the pillar of the family. Live a good life with your mother and sister."

David was about to leave after speaking.

Magus seemed to have decided in his mind and stopped him, "Mr. Lidell, wait a moment!"

"Is there anything else?" David asked.

“Since you like wine so much, I still have a jar left. Let me get it for you.”

“No need, you can keep it for yourself!”

“If you don’t want it! I, Magus Allen, will never feel at ease in this life.”

“Well, okay! I will accept it! Let’s settle the matter and don’t feel that you owe me anything anymore. We will get along as friends when we meet in the future,” David thought for a while and said.

“Certainly!”

Magus turned and went to the cellar to get the wine.

Chapter 1649

Magus entered the wine cellar of the Allen Tavern.

There were many large and small wine jars in the wine cellar, and they were densely packed together. There should be at least thousands of jars.

Mosi brewed more than 95% of them while Magus brewed the rest.

Back then, Mosi was also a very skilled winemaker.

However, in the past few years, he had gradually acquired some bad habits. He would not come home for a few days and his focus would not be on the tavern anymore.

He also handed the tavern to Magus.

The Allen family didn’t know what he was doing outside, which was why the Allen Tavern ended up the way it was today.

After Magus entered the cellar, he took a small shovel and walked through the cellar to an inconspicuous corner at the deepest point. Then, he squatted down and started digging up the soil with the small shovel in his hand.

He was very fast. After a few minutes, he had dug up half a meter deep, only to reveal a handle.

After he gripped the handle, Magus pulled it hard.

He pulled a square panel with a diameter of about 20 to 30 centimeters, revealing a small space inside.

What entered Magus' eyes was a sealed wine jar.

The wine jar was not big, and it was tightly sealed with special materials. It did not look very eye-catching, but judging from its location, one could tell the item it contained would not be simple.

As he was staring at the jar of wine, Magus began to reminisce.

This was a secret that his grandfather told him when he was dying a few years ago.

This wine should have been passed on to his father Mosi, and then Mosi would pass it to him. when he was dying.

Pass it on to him when his father was dying.

However, Mosi had stopped caring about the tavern by then.

He was always idle, and he would leave early in the morning and return late at night.

Sometimes, he would not even return for two or three days at a time.

As a result, the old master of the Allen family told Magus the secret directly, skipping a generation.

According to Magus' grandpa, this jar of wine was a fine wine handed down from generation to generation by the ancestors of the Allen family.

The exact age could not be determined, but they knew it had been around a long time.

Back then, the Allen family used to be a big family and they specialized in brewing wine for major forces.

The wine they made back then was not the same as it was now.

They were on totally different levels.

Everyone knew that the most important thing in winemaking was the raw material.

The more precious the raw material was, the better the wine would be.

This jar of wine might have been left over from that time.

The reason why Magus decided to take out this jar of wine was also after careful consideration.

The Allen family had experienced the most dangerous catastrophe since he was born.

Neither his sister nor his mother, nor Magus himself, ever thought that his father would mortgage the tavern.

Not only did Mosi lose his family's millions in savings, but he also sold the Allen Tavern, which pushed the family into desperation.

Without the Allen Tavern, how would Magus, his sister, and his mother survive in the Central Sacred Continent?

Magus could forgive Mosi after he stopped caring for the tavern these years. He could also forgive Mosi for fooling around all day long and only coming back to ask for money when he ran out and losing the family's millions of savings.

After all, Mosi was his father who gave birth to him and raised him.

He could earn more money if he ran out as long as it did not affect the life of the family.

However, Magus could not accept or forgive Mosi for mortgaging the tavern to Black Water without caring about the consequences.

Because this tavern was not only the ancestral home of the Allen family from generation to generation but also the place where the family lived in the Central Sacred Continent.

This time, Magus decided not to forgive his father.

He was going to transfer the ownership of the tavern to himself and support the family.

From then on, he would not provide his father with a penny.

Without David's selfless help today, the consequences would have been disastrous if he failed to pay 10 million to pay off the debt in seven days.

Moreover, David also saved his mother.

Magus had nothing to repay David's kindness, so he planned to give him the jar of wine left by his ancestors.

No matter how much this jar of wine was worth, it was the thought that counted.

This was the most valuable thing the Allen family could offer.

Chapter 1650

'I hope Mr. Lidell will like this.'

Magus lay on the ground and picked up the wine with both hands.

Then, he quickly left the cellar.

David was waiting for Magus in the private room, and the mother and daughter were also chatting with David inside.

Marigold kept blushing and did not dare to look at David.

Her mother could not help sighing when she saw it.

'This girl is yearning for love.

'It's a pity that Mr. Lidell is not living in the same world as us.'

About ten minutes later, Magus came back with a jar of wine.

The mother and daughter looked at the wine jar in Magus's arms. Both of them had puzzled looks on their faces.

They knew the wine in the cellar very well, and they had never seen this small jar.

The seal was also completely different from the other wine jars.

This jar of wine bore the ancestral secret of the Allen family.

It would only be passed onto the next successor of the Allen Tavern right before the previous generation died

The others would not know about this.

Therefore, Marigold and her mother did not know the existence of this jar of wine.

Even Mosi had no idea about it.

Fortunately, Magus' grandfather did not pass it on to Mosi.

If he knew, it was likely that he had already dug it up and sold it.

If Mosi could mortgage the Allen Tavern, what would he not sell?

“Mr. Lidell, I can't repay your kindness to the Allen family. This jar of wine is a little something from the Allen family. I hope you will like it. Thank you for helping us so selflessly. Without you, our family of three would have to sleep on the streets in seven days.”

Magus walked up to David, and after speaking, he bowed deeply.

After that, he handed the small wine jar to David.

At this time, Marigold and her mother also came over. They stood with Magus and bowed to David to thank him.

For this family, the tavern was their life.

Although this tavern was mortgaged by Mosi for 10 million Star Dollars, the actual value might be more than ten million.

However, even if they were offered 100 million, they would not sell the tavern.

Some things could not be measured by money.

The actions of the family moved David deeply.

He could also understand what the Allen family was doing.

After all, a man without money was no man at all.

Too much money was useless, but one could not be without it too.

At least it proved that David did the right thing.

This was a grateful family.

“Why are you doing this? I have already said that it's just a small effort and you don't have to take it to heart. Even if I ran into another person, I would have helped them. Ten million is really nothing to me.”

“It might be nothing to you, but to our family, it's a great kindness. I hope you accept this jar of wine as it's a little something from my family,” Magus said.

His tone was full of respect.

“Mr. Lidell, please accept this small gift from the Allen family,” Marigold and her mother also said.

They did not know where Magus got the jar of wine.

Therefore, they only had the same thought as Magus when they asked David to accept it. It was just a little gift.

No matter how valuable it was, it could not be worth ten million Star Dollars, right?

David could not turn down the kindness.

Hence, he reached out to take the small wine jar from Magus’ hand.

When his hands just touched the wine jar, a notification from the system popped up suddenly.

Seven words came into David’s eyes.

‘Exquisite Wine of Hundred Flowers and Fruits!’
